597. Subsequent general assent.]—Where the master of an apprentice told him "that he had no further employment for him & he might go where he pleased," & the apprentice hearing of another master was going to him, & being met by his original master, & asked where he was going, answered that he was going to U., to which the master replied "he might go there or where he pleased":—Held: this was not such a particular assent of the original master to the service with U. as would enable the apprentice thereby to gain a settlement, though the indentures were not delivered up or cancelled.—R. v. CREDITON (INHABITANTS) (1800), 1 East, 59; 2 Bott, 457; 102 E. R. 23.

598. Permission to go & learn trade.]—An apprentice offered his master a guinea "to let him off," to which the master agreed, & was also to give him a suit of clothes when the guinea was paid; but the indentures were not delivered up or cancelled. The guinea not being paid, the indentures still subsisted in law, & a settlement may be gained by serving another master with the consent of the first. The sessions ought properly to find the fact of such consent, & not merely evidence of it; but having found that on application by the apprentice to his original master for leave to serve B., who would not take him without, the master said "he might go with all his heart, & that it would be a good thing for him to learn the trade": this was holden sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion of the sessions that the original master had consented to the particular service.—R. v. SHEBBEAR (INHABITANTS) (1800), 1 East, 73; 102 E. R. 29.

Whether settlement gained under new master.—Transfer by widow.—With apprentice's consent.]—Upon a special order it was stated that an apprentice, upon the death of his master, was with his own consent turned over by the widow, who had taken no administration, to another master, whom he served. The ct. held it a good settlement in the last parish.—R. v. EAST BRIDG-

602. — Transfer with consent of executor.] — If the master of an apprentice die, & exor., at the pauper's request, agree that he shall go to live with another person, a service of forty days with such person, before the term of the apprenticeship expires, gains a settlement under the apprenticeship.—R. v. STOCKLAND (INHABITANTS) (1779), 1 Doug. K. B. 70; 2 Bott, 450; Cald. Mag. Cas. 61; 99 E. R. 49.

603. — Transfer with consent of son & assignee—Parish apprentice—Apprenticeship dissolved by statute.] — Since 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, for the regulation of parish apprentices, which recites "that on the death of the master during the term of such apprenticeship, the agreement for service on the part of the apprentice is at an end, but the covenant for maintenance on the part of the master still continues as far as his assets extend, or doubts have arisen with respect thereto," etc.; & then enacts that such covenants for maintenance of parish apprentices, with whom no more than £5 shall be given, shall not continue in force longer than for three calendar months after the death of the master, etc., during which three months the apprentice shall continue to serve exors., etc., or their appointee; & that within the three months two justices of the peace, on application of the widow or certain relatives of the master, may, by indorsement on the indenture, etc., direct such apprentice to serve out his time with the appct., such appct. having lived with & been part of the family of master, etc., at his death; but otherwise, that such apprenticeship shall be determined; & then it provides that nothing thereinbefore contained shall extend to any parish apprentice but to such only as shall be living with & make part of the family, or be in the actual employment of the original master, etc., or if any subsequent master, etc., appointed under the provisions of the Act at the time of the death of such master, etc.:—Held : a parish apprentice who was not living at the time of his mistress's death with her appointee under 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, though living with her son by her individual consent, could not gain a settlement in another parish by serving another mistress with the consent of the son & assignee of the original mistress; given after the death of the original mistress; the contract of service being declared by the recital of the Act to be at an end upon the death of the original mistress, unless continued in the manner described in 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, ss. 2, 3, 4, to which sections the proviso in 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 5, seems properly to apply.—R. v. SHEEPSHEAD (INHABITANTS) (1812), 15 East, 59; 104 E. R. 766.

604. — Service with partner.] — A. is apprenticed to B. & C. partners. The partnership being dissolved B. removes & A. serves C. & C.'s new partner D. After the death of C., A. continues to serve D. It not being found by the sessions that the service under D. was with the consent of B., this ct. will not refer the service to the apprenticeship. No settlement is therefore gained by A., in the parish in which he served & resided with D.—R. v. ST. MARTIN'S, EXETER (INHABITANTS) (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 655; 1 Har. & W. 69; 4 Nev. & M. K. 606. — [The master of a parish apprentice not having work sufficient for him, proposed to him to go to a farm in a different parish, occupied by the master's sister. The pauper assented to the proposal, & agreed with her to work there for a twelve month for his meat & drink. He worked for her for four years & four months. During the first two years he received from her meat & drink. During the third & fourth he received wages :—Held : (1) no settlement was gained by the service with the sister, the service not being under the indentures; (2) there had been a putting away of the apprentice without the consent of the justices, within Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), s. 9, & the pauper did not by his service with the sister gain any settlement by hiring & service.—R. v. SHIPTON (INHABITANTS) (1828), 8 B. & C. 88; 1 Man. & Ry. M. C. 394; 6 L. J. O. S. M. C. 92; 108 E. R. 975.

607. — [A parish apprentice, bound for seven years to A., served him for four years, when A. agreed with B., who carried on the same business in another parish, that the pauper should work for B., B. paying 5s. a week to A. out of the pauper's earnings; the pauper accordingly went & continued to work for B. till the end of his apprenticeship, with the exception of ten days when he was sent for by A. to assist him during illness. B. paid A. at the rate agreed upon, deducting for the ten days' absence during A.'s illness :—Held : there being no consent of justices, that this was a "placing out" or "putting away" of the apprentice, within Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), s. 9, and that no settlement was gained by the service under B.—R. v. On each Saturday during the term N.'s works closed at two o'clock in the afternoon: throughout the term the pauper resided & slept every night except Saturday, & occasionally Sunday, at lodgings in B.; on each Saturday after leaving work he went, until shortly after his marriage, to the house of his father, who lived in M.: he slept there on Saturday night, & occasionally on Sunday night, & returned to his work on Monday morning. Shortly after his marriage, which took place about a year before the expiration of the term, he slept at his father-in-law's house, which was also in M., on Saturday nights, & occasionally on Sunday nights. For the last eighteen months or two years of the term he lodged at the house of C. in B., except on Saturday nights, when C. required the room which he occupied for members of her own family who came to see her on that day. He slept at his lodgings on the night of Friday, Sept. 27, 1850, & about two in the afternoon of the next day left off work & went to M. & slept there that night & also on the Sunday night. On the Monday morning he returned to N., & worked one week at the same rate of wages, & then left:—Held: he slept in M. as an apprentice on the last night of his apprenticeship, & therefore gained a settlement there.—*R. v. Sect. 6.—Settlement by apprenticeship: Sub-sect. 4, B. Sect. 7: Sub-sect. 1, A., B., C. & D.]

633. Subsequent return to parish of first master—Service not resumed.]—An apprentice, after serving out most of his time with his master in S., obtained a subsequent settlement in H., by serving another master there for forty days by the direction of his first master, who was to receive 3s. a week from the second master for such service: & being then dismissed by the second master, the apprentice unknown to the first master, & without any intention of returning into his service again, lodged for one night in the same parish of S., & then went into a third parish, & worked for himself for a month, when his term being expired, he returned to S., & went with his original master to a common friend, with whom the indenture had been deposited, to take it up; which he did, & carried it away:—Held: the settlement was not brought back to S. by such casual lodging of the apprentice one night in the same parish of his master, without any resumption of, or even intention to resume, the service with the first master under the indenture.—R. v. SMARDEN (INHABITANTS) (1811), 13 East, 452; 104 E. R. 446.

634. — Service with second master continued.]—Where an apprentice served his master for six years & nine months in the parish of I. under indentures which expired at Midsummer day, & then went into the parish of D. & hired himself for a month to another master at weekly wages, to which service the first master gave his consent; & at the end of that month, the pauper entered into a fresh agreement with the second master at the like wages, & continued to serve under that agreement until June 7, when he was called out to serve in the local militia, which he did for a fortnight & returned to his second master on June 21 & made a new agreement to serve him as before at sixpence a day, & while in that service he slept from June 21 to 24 inclusive in the parish of I.:—Held: whether the service with the second master during the remainder of the term was with the consent of the first or not, still the pauper's sleeping for the last three nights in I. settled him in that parish, though the first master did not know of his sleeping there.—R. v. IDDESLEIGH (INHABITANTS) (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 332; 2 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 245.

636. — Must be actually vested.]—R. v. CARLTON (INHABITANTS), No. 734, post.

637. — Permission to occupy room in charitable institution insufficient.]—A poor widow, occupying a room in a charitable institution as an object of the charity, & receiving £8 a year as such object does not by such occupation either gain a settlement or become irremovable, though, by the rules of the charity, she is only liable to lose the benefits of it, by absence or misconduct.

A settlement by estate is founded upon the principle that a man is not to be removed from his own property, but he must have some estate, legal or equitable, in what he claims. Here the pauper had merely a permission to occupy under certain conditions. There is no authority to show that the inmate of a hospital of charity has any right such as to exempt her from removability if she become chargeable (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—R. v. ST. MARY CASTLEGATE (CHURCHWARDENS) (1852), 21 L. J. M. C. 106; 18 L. T. O. S. 224; 18 Jur. 363; sub nom. ST. MARY CASTLEGATE (CHURCHWARDENS) v. ST. MARY BISHOPHILL THE ELDER (CHURCHWARDENS), 16 J. P. 87.

638. Strict proof of title not required—Instrument not under seal admissible in evidence.]—The question of strict legal title ought not to be entertained in cases of settlement. Therefore, an instrument not under seal, which professed to convey the fee, was held to be admissible evidence, with reference to the question of equitable estate; though the instrument could convey no legal interest.—R. v. RIDGWELL (INHABITANTS) (1827), 6 B. & C. 665; 9 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 678; 4 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 459; 5 L. J. O. S. M. C. 67; 108 E. R. 596.

B. Estate of Devisee.

640. ——A devisee of a copyhold was admitted after he had resided more than forty days on the copyhold. His son became emancipated after the expiration of the forty days, & before the admittance:—Held: the father by such residence gained a settlement which was communicated to the son.—R. v. THRUSCROSS (INHABITANTS) (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 120; 3 Nev. & M. K. B. 284; 2 Nev. & M. M. C. 201; 3 L. J. M. C. 83; 110 E. R. 1156.

B. & C., A. has an equitable interest in the estate, & by residing upon it forty days, gains a settlement.—R. v. WIVELINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1781), 2 Doug. K. B. 767; Cald. Mag. Cas. 121; 99 E. 642. — Proceeds divided among children.]—Testator, by his will, directed that a freehold estate should be sold within six months after his wife's death & equally divided between his children. He appointed exors., & directed that their reasonable expenses should be paid. The pauper, who was one of the co-heiresses of testator, resided on the devised property for more than forty days after the death of the wife, & until it was sold under the provisions of the will, when she received her share of the purchase-money:—Held: she had such a legal title coupled with an equitable interest as conferred a settlement by estate.—R. v. BURGATE (INHABITANTS) (1854), 3 E. & B. 823; 2 C. L. R. 1484; 23 L. J. M. C. 143; 23 L. T. O. S. 155; 18 J. P. 631; 18 Jur. 875; 2 W. R. 517; 118 E. R. 1350.

643. — Estate purchased for less than £30.]—A father having purchased a tenement for less than £30, devised it in trust to be let to farm during his daughter's life, & to pay her the rents after deducting the expenses:—Held: by forty days' residence thereon by permission of the trustee, after the father's death, she gained a settlement.—R. v. HOLM EAST WAVER QUARTER (INHABITANTS) (1812), 16 East, 127; 104 E. R. 1037.

(2) Though a person cannot acquire a settlement by a purchase for less than £30 paid, yet if he take such estate by devise, he may. So, though he cannot gain a settlement, by renting a tenement of less value than £10 a year, yet, if such estate devolve upon him by operation of law, he may acquire a settlement by forty days' residence upon it; & it signified not, whether he be a tenant from year to year, or a tenant for a term of years, the distinction being one of words rather than of substance (BAYLEY, J.).—R. v. T. died about thirty-six years ago intestate, leaving a widow, a son, & his daughter. The widow & daughter, with P., her husband, were living in the house at T.'s death, & the widow continued there till her death, about six years ago, & the daughter & P. to the present time; but it did not appear that letters of administration were taken out:—Held: P. did not by such residence, acquire a settlement in C. It did not appear that letters of administration had been taken out after the death of P.:—Held: B. did not by such residence gain a settlement.—*R. v. 658. — Person taking possession solely entitled.]—A sole next of kin has such an equitable interest in a leasehold tenement of the intestate, that she gains a settlement by residing forty days in the same parish after intestate's death, before administration granted to her. It matters not that the widow of intestate survived him, if she died afterwards without having taken out administration, leaving the other sole next of kin to intestate. But no settlement is gained by the mere relation back to the death of intestate of the letters of administration when granted, taken out only eighteen days before the next of kin parted with her interest in the leasehold; so as to connect the residence for those eighteen days with a residence by such next of kin in same parish for more than forty days, after the deaths of intestate & his widow, before such administration granted.—*R. v. 659. — Estate not distributed.—Husband gains no settlement.]—The lord of a manor granted a lease of a cottage for thirty-one years to A., who resided in it above a year, & died, leaving a widow & three daughters. Administration was granted to the widow, but no distribution of the estate was made. After his death, the widow, & by her permission, one of the daughters & her husband resided in it some years:—Held: the daughter, or her husband in her right, had not any equitable estate in the cottage, & no settlement was gained by their residence in it.—*R. v. E. Estate of Personal Representative.

660. Settlement gained—By executor—Estate under ten pounds a year.]—It is very true, that a share not amounting to £10 a year, of a tenement of above £10 a year in value, will not do. But here he has a right as exor. The value therefore is totally immaterial; because, by common law, no person can be removed from his own: & one who has a right to reside, irremovably, does thereby gain a settlement, if he resides forty days (WILMOT, J.).—*R. v. 662. — By administrator.]—A. rented a house in applt. parish of L. as tenant from year to year, & died. His widow, a fortnight after his death, told the landlord that she wished to pay the rent weekly; he assented, & she paid it weekly for the following nine months, when she quitted on a week's notice. Two months after her husband's death, the attorney for resp. parish, which had relieved the widow, told her she had a right to take out administration if she chose, & if she would leave it to him, he would do whatever was necessary; she assented. The letters of administration were obtained, & the pauper resided forty days afterwards in applt. parish. The sessions found that the administration was fraudulently taken out by the direction & at the expense of resp. parish, for the purpose of settling the pauper in applt. parish:—Held: as the widow was not only entitled, but bound by law, to take out administration, there was no fraud in the transaction which could prevent her from taking, as administratrix, her husband's interest as yearly tenant, & thereby acquiring a settlement.—R. v. GREAT GLENN (INHABITANTS) (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 188; 2 Nev. & M. K. B. 91; 1 Nev. & M. M. C. 158; 2 L. J. M. C. 69; 110 E. R. 762.

The examination stated this interest, & the grant of the letters of administration, with names & dates; & together with the examination, there were sent to applt. parish copies of letters of administration corresponding in names & dates with the letters described in the examination: but the examination did not expressly show that any letters of administration were produced before the justices, nor was any notice given to applt. of their having been produced:—Held: the examinations were not, on that ground, insufficient; for it must be assumed that the letters sent to applt. parish were before the justices.—*R. v. Being sick, his daughter & her husband came, by permission of the parish officers, to reside with & take care of him: after his death, the daughter being his heir, they continued to reside there above forty days, claiming a right to the possession:—Held: they thereby gained a settlement, being entitled to the reversion, & the residence not being fraudulent.—*R. v. 679. —.]—A settlement by estate was claimed for H. under the following circumstances:—Premises were demised for three lives, which expired in 1784, & a lease for other lives was then granted to a new tenant, who paid rent under it during all the time after mentioned. At the time of the execution of the lease, W. was in possession, & claimed to hold, on the ground that one of the lives in the first lease was still in existence. He continued to hold for twenty-six years, & then died, more than twenty years before the settlement came in question. His widow retained possession for sixteen years, in the last of which she devised the premises to her daughter, the wife of H. in fee, & appointed her extrix. & residuary legatee; at the same time expressing a doubt whether the premises did not belong to the party who became lessee in 1784. She left other sons & daughters. On her death, H. & his wife, who had been living with the mother on the premises, retained possession for three years, at the end of which H. conveyed them to a purchaser by feoffment & livery of seisin. No probate of the mother's will was obtained. Neither W. nor the parties holding after him ever paid any rent. The lives in the second lease had not expired when the settlement came into dispute:—Held: H. did not acquire a settlement by residence on the premises after the death of his wife's mother, there having been no adverse possession for twenty years by W. or those who succeeded him, & H.'s wife not having taken any interest which could give a settlement, as extrix. of her mother.—R. v. CALOW (INHABITANTS) (1814), 3 M. & S. 22; 2 Bott, 533; 105 E. R. 520.

681. —.]—The husband of a pauper being settled in parish A., in 1800 enclosed a small piece of waste land in parish B. from a common, & held & cultivated it until Christmas, 1827, when he sold it & conveyed it to a purchaser. From the year 1800 to 1825 he resided out of parish B.; but in the year 1825 he removed to that parish, & in 1826 built a hut on the land, & lived in it a year & a half. In the years 1806, 1811, & 1817, the parish officers & freeholders perambulated the parish for the purpose of marking their boundaries, & asserting their rights of common. On those occasions they pulled up a portion of the fence to the land so enclosed, & dug up part of the bank, & rode through the enclosure. In 1820 or 1822 a like perambulation was made by the direction of the lord of the manor, when similar acts were done. No acknowledgment was paid to the lord of the manor for the land:—Held: (1) there was an adverse possession, & the husband of the pauper gained a settlement by estate in B.

(2) I doubt very much whether the lord of the manor could take advantage of the entries made by the parishioners in 1806, 1811 & 1817; for they were not made for his benefit, but for that of the parish (PARKE, J.).—*R. v. Fourteen years after he gave, by parol, part of the land so enclosed to B., who built a cottage on it, & afterwards enclosed a further portion of the common; & B. occupied the whole premises for about sixteen years. The copyholders, who were accustomed every seven years to break down the fences of encroachments on the common, twice broke down the fences between the common & the new land thus enclosed by B., the fence between the new & the old enclosure having been previously removed, & passed over that part of the land which had been newly enclosed by B.:—Held: B. gained a settlement by estate.—*R. v. A. continued in possession of the cottage & garden until his death in 1829, & was succeeded by his son, who continued to occupy the same premises:—Held: this payment could not be considered in the nature of a chief or quit rent, but as an acknowledgment of the lord's title, & therefore, no settlement was acquired by estate.—R. v. CUDDINGTON (1845), 1 New Mag. Cas. 369; 2 New Sess. Cas. 10; 14 L. J. M. C. 182; 5 L. T. O. S. 172; 9 J. P. 713; 9 Jur. 938.

The parties always continued in possession; & it did not appear whether the money were ever paid; or what was the value of the cottage:—Held: on the death of the first husband, the pauper who married the widow gained a settlement by residing forty days in the cottage of which she had retained the possession.—*R. v. Pauper, before the death of N., was married to one of the daughters, & lived with her in a house, part of the devised estates, as tenant to N. After the death of N., pauper continued to occupy & reside in the house as tenant to the trustees, paying them rent. They divided the rents monthly among the nine children. Such residence by the pauper, & division of rents by the trustees, continued for two years after N.'s death. The estates were then sold, & the proceeds divided according to the will, pauper receiving his wife's share:—Held: the pauper had not, during his residence after the death of N., such an equitable estate or right as conferred a settlement.—*R. v. (2) But when a man, being yearly tenant, dies, & his wife occupies & pays rent as one of the next of kin, but without taking out letters of administration, the wife, neither gains a settlement herself, nor is a settlement gained by a second husband, by reason of his marriage with her during such occupation & of forty days' residence.—*R. v. 697. — Or lessee.]—On appeal against an order of removal of a pauper widow, appts. set up a settlement of the pauper's late husband in the removing parish, by estate, by marriage of the husband with the pauper, she being at the time of the marriage, as stated in the ground of appeal, possessed of a cottage "for a certain term of years then unexpired, or as tenant thereof from year to year, under a yearly or other renting," & residence thereon for forty days. The sessions affirmed the settlement by estate, & discharged the order, subject to a case in which it was stated that, at the time of the marriage, she had been, & was then, "living as a tenant" of the cottage, & that she & her husband lived there, after the marriage, for upwards of a year. That the pauper was called as a witness for resps., but was not asked, by either party, on what terms she held the cottage. The case left to the ct. whether the evidence "was sufficient to establish the settlement by estate":—Held: there was evidence from which the sessions might infer that the wife held, before the marriage, for a term of years, or from year to year.

Semble: that, if she had held only as tenant at will, the residence of the husband for forty days without a determination of the will would have conferred a settlement by estate upon him.—*R. v. 701. — Wife weekly tenant—Rent below ten pounds a year.—On appeal against an order for the removal of the wife of W. to the place of settlement of the husband acquired before marriage, the following facts were stated for the opinion of the ct., under Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (c. 45), s. 11. The woman being tenant of a cottage in the township of H., at the rent of 1s. per week, & residing in it, married W.; & from & after the marriage the husband resided with his wife, & occupied the tenement for seven years, during which he paid the weekly rent:—Held: the husband was shown to have acquired a settlement by estate in H.; for that, the wife's tenancy from week to week having become vested in the husband by the marriage, no determination of that tenancy during the seven years was shown, the payment of the rent by the husband being equally consistent with the continuance of the old tenancy as with the creation of a new one in him; & the residence for forty days during the continuance of the estate acquired by marriage was sufficient, notwithstanding that the tenancy was not for forty days certain.—*R. v. 706. — Mortgagor devising land to trustees—Widow residuary legatee.—Testator purchased land in the parish of A., & mortgaged it, & by will devised it to trustees in trust for sale, & to apply the proceeds in payment of his debts, & the residue to his wife for her own use & benefit:—Held: under this devise, the wife had an equitable estate in the land itself such as to confer a right to a settlement: actual residence on the land itself was not necessary, residence in the same parish being sufficient; the occupation of the land by the trustees under the will was not an adverse possession by them against her, & evidence as to the value of the land, with the view of proving that there would be no residue after payment of the debts was immaterial, the question being what estate the wife took under the will, & not what was the value of that estate.—*R. v. The estates were vested in the corp. at large, & demised by lease, whereby the rents were reserved to the corp.:—Held: a freeman of B., who resided in the borough, & was in the receipt of a portion of the rents, which had been assigned to him by the corp., did not thereby gain a settlement by estate.—R. v. BELFORD (INHABITANTS) (1829), 10 B. & C. 54; 5 Man. & Ry. K. B. 174; 2 Man. & Ry. M. C. 608; 8 L. J. O. S. M. C. 38; 109 E. R. 371.

713. — Schoolmaster appointed by trustees of charity—Residing rent free—Trustees fraudulently withholding part of trust estate.]—Under a devise by three trustees in fee of a certain farm, upon trust to dispose of the rents, issues, & profits, as to 40s. a year to the poor of the parish, & the residue to be paid to a schoolmaster, to be nominated by them, to teach the poor children to read the Bible; the trustees, by an agreement in writing, reciting that they were possessed of & entitled to a school house, yard, garden, & premises at M., which they had agreed to let to W. for the purposes mentioned, thereby agreed with W. to let him have the possession, use, & occupation of the school house, etc., & premises, for the purpose of teaching the poor children of M. to read in the Bible, pursuant to the will of B.: & in consideration of his agreeing to teach the children, he was to reside on the premises rent free, & to be paid a certain annual sum by the trustees; who reserved to themselves a power, for reasonable cause, to suspend his salary, & that in case of his death they should turn his exors. out of the premises, & appoint another schoolmaster thereto:—Held: this was an appointment, though irregular in its form, of W. under the will, as schoolmaster, so as to give him a life interest in the school house, etc., & premises, of which he was put in possession, & to enable him to gain a settlement by forty days' residence thereon; though the trustees fraudulently withheld from him part of the rents, issues, & profits of the trust estate: & the finding of the sessions, "that the appointment was fraudulent & in no respect consistent with the will," was to be understood in that sense only, & not as imputing fraud to the schoolmaster himself, who was thus wronged, & who engaged to execute all the duties of his appointment under the will.—*R. v. 714. — Occupation of land as servant.]—A pauper was hired as shepherd, by the tenantry farmers of a manor, for a year, to keep the tenantry flock; he was to receive 14s. per week, & to have a piece of land called the Shepherd's Croft, which was to make up money as good as 16s. a week; & he served a year under his hiring. The tenantry farmers were leaseholders & copyholders of the manor. By agreement made in 1799, between the then lord of the manor & his lessee of the manor, & the leaseholders & copyholders of that manor, arbitrators were appointed for dividing & allotting the open fields within the manor, amongst the lessees for life of the manor,

& the several leaseholders & copyholders in respect of the land which they had in the manor; & the allottees were to be possessed of the lands allotted to them, for the same estate & interest as they had in the lands, in lieu whereof the allotments were made. The arbitrators by their award allotted to W. R., the lord & farmer of the manor, in trust for the shepherd or keeper of the flock, in lieu of lands in the common field, held by custom by the shepherd, the land which the pauper took when he was hired as shepherd, & he let part of this land to a tenant:—Held: the pauper took the land in his character of servant in lieu of wages, & not under the award, & consequently that he gained no settlement by estate.—*R. v. 716. — —.]—The mother of an infant copyholder under fourteen, was holden to be guardian by law of the copyhold, there being no custom of the manor for appointing a guardian, & therefore entitled to reside irremovably on the estate. A grant of parcel of the waste of the manor to hold to B. & his heirs by way of increase to his copyhold, by such services as the copyhold was subject to, for which B. paid a fine of 10s., was held not to enure as copyhold, there being no custom to warrant such grant nor as an estate in fee simple.

purpose to be raising a capital stock for erecting dwelling houses; & they agreed to articles, which provided: that every subscriber should pay 6s. 8d. monthly: freehold land was to be purchased by the club for erecting houses: each member to take as many houses as he should have shares: the houses to be built according to a plan annexed, & under the inspection of the agents of the society: the order in which the members should take the houses to be determined by lot, till all the shares should be drawn: no member to mortgage his house till the conclusion of the society, but each to pay rent to the officers, which was to be deemed a vesting of property in them: no subscriber to have power to let or sell his house till security should be given to the satisfaction of the president: the monthly payments & rents to be placed to the funds of the society till the whole subscriptions should be completed & all the dwelling houses be allotted, & possession of them given to the respective subscribers; the president meanwhile to have the power of distraining for the rent: if a member, after being put in possession of a house, should lock his door, quit the neighbourhood for six months, & neglect to pay his monthly payments & rents, the president & steward might take possession of the house & let or sell it: at the determination of the society, each member was to be fully entitled to his share, & a conveyance thereof at his own expense; the surplus stock to be divided; & meanwhile each member to pay £1 yearly, & to forfeit his share upon making default of any of the payments provided for: the society not to be broken up while six members existed, or before all the buildings should be completed. The club contracted for the purchase of land, & commenced building without any conveyance being made to them. The land was afterwards, by deed to which the club was party, mortgaged to A. for money advanced to the club. The whole purchase-money paid by the club amounted to more than £30, but not to so much as £30 for each subscriber. In 1824 & 1825, E., a member of the club, drew his share, had a house built for him, & entered into possession; & he paid rent till the mtge. was paid off, when the mtgee. conveyed the house to E. & the other members severally. The club had shortly before ended, the shares having been paid up & the houses built. At the time when the club ended, E.'s monthly & annual payments, exclusive of rent, exceeded £30: but such payments made before he came into possession did not amount to £30. The house was not of the annual value of £10:—Held: E. acquired a settlement by residence in the house after the conveyance to him, not having had any legal or equitable estate until the time of such conveyance, & having before that time paid more than £30, so as to satisfy Poor Relief Act, 1722 (c. 7), s. 5.

759. ———.]—A written agreement was made for the purchase of an estate, to be paid for by two instalments; the first was to be payable within a few days after the signing of the agreement, & the last after the expiration of seven months. The vendor was to make out a good title on the payment of the last instalment, & to convey the premises; but the purchaser was to be let into possession upon the payment of the first instalment. The purchaser paid the first instalment, & was let into possession, & continued in possession for a year & a half, but the last instalment was never paid, nor any conveyance ever executed; & the purchaser afterwards gave up the contract upon receiving back part of the first instalment :—Held : under this contract, the purchaser did not acquire an equitable estate, so as to gain a settlement under Poor Relief Act, 1822 (c. 7), s. 5.—*R. v. 762. ——— Purchase from licensee.]—A. built a house on the waste of a manor by license from the lord, resided in it two years, & then sold it to B. The latter sold it to C. for £30, but no conveyance was executed. C. resided in it five years, & paid 1s. per annum rent to the lord, & then sold his interest. No adverse claim was made :—Held : although C. paid a consideration of £30 when he purchased his interest, he did not acquire by purchase an interest or estate sufficient to confer a settlement within Poor Relief Act, 1722 (c. 7), s. 5.—R. v. HAGWORTHINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1823), 1 B. & C. 634; 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 16; 1 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 476; 107 E. R. 233.

SUB-SECT. 4.—CEASING TO INHABIT WITHIN TEN MILES.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 113.

771. Settlement lost thereby—Not merely suspended.]—Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 68, “that no person shall be deemed, etc., to retain any settlement gained by virtue of any possession of any estate or interest in any parish, for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof,” enacts, that a settlement is destroyed by such removal, & not merely suspended, so as to be revived by the pauper's returning to inhabit within the limited distance.

Where a person purchased a leasehold interest, subject to a rent of 150 guineas a year (in the year 1826), & after ten months left the house, which was shut up, but the rent continued to be paid; & afterwards ceased to inhabit in the parish, or within ten miles thereof:—Held: he possessed no settlement in that parish, either by estate, or by “coming to settle,” within Poor Relief Act, 1662 (c. 12).—R. v. ST. GILES IN THE FIELDS (INHABITANTS) (1842), 2 Q. B. 446; 1 Gal. & Dav. 557; 11 L. J. M. C. 18; 6 J. P. 217; 6 Jur. 192; 114 E. R. 176.

772. — — —.]—Pauper, being settled by apprenticeship in M., gained a subsequent settlement in W. by residing on an estate there, but, becoming lunatic while he continued to reside on the same estate, he was, after the passing of Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), removed by his relations to the county lunatic asylum, more than ten miles from W., & was for several years maintained in that asylum, partly by his relatives, partly by the rents of his estate, until, those resources proving inadequate, he was taken from the asylum & brought to W. for one night, & was then removed as a pauper lunatic to the same asylum, by warrant under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38:—Held: an order of justices on the overseers of W., under the last-mentioned clause, for the payment of a weekly sum for his maintenance in the asylum, was wrong, the pauper having, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 68, lost his settlement in W. by ceasing to inhabit.—*R. v. 775. — Settlement by estate—Not settlement by renting.]—A pauper who was the legitimate son of G. deceased, & who had acquired no settlement of his own, was born in the parish of St. P. in 1880. The pauper's father had acquired a settlement in the parish of R. by renting a dwelling-house there of the annual value of £30, & paying rates. He left R. in 1873, & had never acquired any other settlement. An order having been made for the removal of the pauper child to St. P. as its birth settlement, this had been quashed at quarter sessions on the ground that pauper's last legal settlement had been in the parish of R. On appeal:—Held: it was right, as the settlement acquired by the pauper's father at R. had not been lost by him under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 68, by reason of his having gone to reside at a greater distance than ten miles therefrom.—*R. v. Pauper agreed, & occupied accordingly, from Jan. 1831 to Oct. 1832. At May Day, 1831, he paid £5 rent for the preceding half year; & at Martinmas the next half year's rent of £5. In Oct. 1832, pauper gave up the premises to R. No rent had been paid since Martinmas, 1831. One of their duties was to take & furnish houses for their ministers officiating within the circuit. The rents of such houses were sometimes paid by the circuit stewards, & sometimes by the ministers; if by the ministers, the stewards repaid them the amount, together with the amount of the rates & taxes in respect of the houses, which were paid by the ministers in the first instance. It was the custom of the congregation to appoint a minister to officiate in a given place for one year certain, during which he could not be removed; & no minister officiated for more than three years in the same place. At Michaelmas, 1832, the circuit stewards took & furnished a house at C., a place in the circuit, for a year certain, at the rent of £20, as a residence for W., who was then appointed to be minister at C. W. immediately took possession & occupied the house, as minister, till Michaelmas, 1835. During the three years of his occupation, W. paid the annual rent of £20 for the house to the landlord: he was also in each of those years assessed to & paid the poor rates for C. Both rent & poor rates, however, were repaid to him by the circuit stewards.—Held: W. did not gain a settlement in C. by renting a tenement, or by assessment to & payment of rates & taxes, under Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1825 (c. 57), s. 2; Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1831 (c. 18), s. 1; & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 66.—*R. v. Pending the appeal, the pauper returned to W., resided in the house from Dec. 7, 1833, to Jan. 27, 1834, & paid the arrear of rent due for the expired year. On Jan. 1, the order of removal was, upon the appeal, confirmed on the merits:—Held: the pauper gained a settlement at the time of the payment of the arrear, & the confirmation of the order of removal showed only that he had not completed a settlement at the time of the order.—*R. v. #### D. Occupation.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 114 (a).

840. Necessity for occupation for a year.]—A pauper was removed to S. on the examination of P. & A. P. deposed that on July 22, 1839, he let to pauper's husband a house in S., "at the rent of £10 per year," that the husband "occupied the house until July 22, 1841," & paid P. "the whole of the rent during that time." A. deposed that the husband in July, 1839, went to the house, & "resided in that house until Mar. 1842":—Held: the sessions were not entitled to affirm the order of removal, the examinations not showing that the house had been occupied for a year under a yearly hiring within Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1831 (c. 18), s. 1.

Nothing can be left to intentment, unless it be a necessary intentment. It will not be enough, that the examination be consistent with either a conformity or a nonconformity to the statute applicable to the particular settlement (WIGHTMAN, J.).—R. v. ST. SEPULCHRE (INHABITANTS) (1844), 6 Q. B. 580; 1 Dav. & Mer. 272; 1 New Sess. Cas. 400; 14 L. J. M. C. 8; 4 L. T. O. S. 133 a; 9 J. P. 150; 8 Jur. 1092; 115 E. R. 217.

841. — Effect of underletting part—Whether settlement gained.]—A pauper held a house at the annual rent of £3, from Lady Day to Michaelmas, 1821, & a different house from Michaelmas, 1824, to Lady Day, 1822, at the annual rent of £9, & during the whole of that period he was the tenant of a garden at an annual rent of two guineas; but he had agreed with another person that they should share the expense & the profits arising from the cultivation of the garden, & that person paid him half of the rent, but he paid the whole to the landlord:—Held: he did not gain a settlement, because he did not during the whole year, as required by the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, hold a house & occupy land which together were of the annual value of £10.—R. v. TONBRIDGE (INHABITANTS) (1826), 6 B. & C. 88; 9 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 128;

845. ————.]—In 1824 the pauper rented a dwelling-house in the parish of D., at the rent of £7 per annum, & continued to occupy it till 1826. At Michaelmas, 1824, he hired land to Michaelmas, 1825, at the yearly rent of £8 10s., & then entered into possession, but in Apr. 1825, he underlet the land for the remainder of his term; the under tenant had possession of the land till Michaelmas, 1825; & he, by agreement with the pauper, paid the original landlord the rent accruing due from Apr. to Michaelmas, 1825, the rest having been paid by the pauper:—Held: the pauper did not gain a settlement by occupation for a year, inasmuch as he had not continued to fulfil the conditions of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, by personally occupying the land down to the time when Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1825 (c. 57), passed. Qu.: if he had done so, whether the Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1825 (c. 57), which only requires that the land be occupied under the yearly hiring, could have had a retrospective effect, so as to make the former occupation available in conjunction with that under the new statute.—R. v. Where therefore, the pauper occupied, etc., & paid rent for a tenement conformably to the former Act:—Held: a settlement was gained by payment of rates although he had underlet part, & could not therefore gain a settlement by renting a tenement.—R. v. It is not sufficient if part to the annual value of £10 is occupied. Thus, A. hired two cottages, being separate & distinct dwelling-houses, but adjoining to each other & under one continuous roof, together with three acres of land, for a year, from Lady Day, 1832, at the rent of £14 a year. At Lady Day A. entered upon one of the cottages & the land, & occupied the same under the hiring till Lady Day, 1833. The other cottage he underlet to S. at a rent of £4, & S. occupied it till Lady Day, 1833, & paid A. rent for it. A. paid the whole rent £14 to the landlord. 851. ———— Effect of removal order.—A pauper on Apr. 6, 1823, hired a house for a year at the rent of £12 per annum in the parish of A. In Jan. 1824, he became chargeable to that parish, & was, by an order of justices, removed to the parish of B. There was no appeal against the order of removal. The pauper returned on the same day to his house in the parish of A., & continued to occupy it until the expiration of the year for which he had hired it, & paid the rent for a year:—Held: as the pauper had hired & held the house for a year, & paid the rent for that period, all the requisites of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, had been complied with, & he gained a settlement in the parish of A. by renting a tenement.—*R. v. He occupied the premises from the time of the first hiring until six months after the second hiring, & paid the rent during the whole period, calculated from May Day, 1820:—Held: he thereby gained a settlement in S., for that the occupation under the different hirings might be connected so as to make an occupation for one whole year within 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.—*R. v. Pauper, who was not himself in the service of C., continued to occupy the cottage for sixteen years, during all which time, & after he quitted it, some one or more of his children continued to work at the mill. W.'s first year's rent was paid to the pauper by a cheque, which the pauper handed over to D.; & also paid him £3 2s. 6d., making together the sum of £8 6s. 6d. paid during the year 1839 on account of the rent due at Christmas in that year. In the course of the second year, 1840, W. paid his rent of £5 4s. for that year direct to D. In Oct. 1840, the pauper was rated to the poor rate for the premises in question; which rate he paid in Jan. 1841, & resided thereon for more than forty days afterwards:—Held: the ct. would not infer from the facts stated that the last payment of £5 4s. by W. was a payment on account of the first year's rent, so as to make up the sum of £10 of rent actually paid in one year, required by Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1825 (c. 57), to enable the pauper to gain a settlement by payment of rates, the sessions not having expressly found that that payment was to be so appropriated.—R. v. CRANBROOK (INHABITANTS) (1844), 1 New Sess. Cas. 5; 8 J. P. 488.

900. — —.]—In Sept. 1857, A. entered into the occupation of a house in the township of E., & occupied the house until Nov. 1858. In Apr. 1858, one poor rate was made for the whole of the ensuing year, in which A. was assessed at £2 4s., but he paid only 14s., being in proportion to the period of his occupation after the rate was made: the house remained unoccupied until after the making of the next poor rate. The township of E. is wholly within the borough of L.; during A.'s occupation a watch rate was ordered by the town council to be made for the borough under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, & 7 Will. 4, & 1 Vict. c. 81, the amount to be levied by a pound rate; & it was ordered that a certain quota should be assessed & levied on the whole of the township of E., except such parts as were more than 200 yards from any street or continuous line of houses which was regularly watched in the borough under the provisions of the Acts. The rate was made accordingly by the overseers of E. upon the ratable parts of the parish, & collected by them, & in it A. was properly assessed, & paid the amount:—Held: (1) A. did not acquire a settlement, under the Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, by reason of the above payment of the poor rate, not having paid that with which he was charged; (2) the non-payment of the poor rate did not prevent him from acquiring a settlement by being charged & paying any other distinct levy or tax of the township; (3) the watch rate was a "public tax or levy of the township" of E., within Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6; & A. had therefore acquired a settlement in E.—*EVERTON OVERSEERS v. 902. — Paving & lighting rates.]—Under a local Act, comrs. were authorised to levy rates for paving & lighting the streets, etc., within the city of E., on the several owners & occupiers of all houses within the city. The comrs. were empowered to appoint two or more of the inhabitants of each parish in the city to be assessors of the rates, & the assessors were required to make the rates & the comrs. were to settle & sign the same. The comrs. were also to appoint the overseers of the respective parishes to collect the rates. The rates were made & collected in each parish by the assessors & collectors as required by the Act. T.

occupied a house in a parish in the city for one year, at a yearly rent above £10, & paid his share of the rates made under the local Act:—Held: these rates were public taxes of the parish within Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, & T. had acquired a settlement in the parish.—*R. v. D. Assessment.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 115.

908. Necessity for assessment.]—By Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, a person to gain a settlement by payment of rates, must be "charged with & pay his share towards the public taxes or levies." Where grounds of appeal alleged that a pauper "had occupied a house, & resided therein, for upwards of seven months, & paid one or more of the parochial rates or taxes in respect of such house."—Held: insufficient, because it was not also stated that he was "charged with" such rates or taxes.—R. v. ST. OLAVE'S, SOUTHWARK (INHABITANTS) (1844), 5 Q. B. 912; 1 New Mag. Cas. 24; 1 New Sess. Cas. 188; 13 L. J. M. C. 161; 3 L. T. O. S. 81; 8 J. P. 759; 114 E. R. 1492.

913. What amounts to assessment—Statute apportioning liability between outgoing & incoming tenant.]—A local Act renders the incoming & the outgoing tenant of premises in the parish of St. Marylebone liable respectively to the payment of the rates of the parish in proportion to the times of their occupation respectively. A. occupied a house in St. Marylebone for the latter part of a year, in respect of which the outgoing tenant was rated; & A. paid the portion of the rate in respect of the time during which he occupied, but was not entered on the ratebook as occupier for any part of that time:—Held: he acquired a settlement under Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6.—R. v. ST. MARYLEBONE (INHABITANTS) (1850), 15 Q. B. 399; 4 New Sess. Cas. 199; 19 L. J. M. C. 201; 15 L. T. O. S. 224; 14 J. P. 559; 14 Jur. 833; 117 E. R. 510.

914. ——— Local Act making landlord liable.]—By a local Act the landlords of houses in the parish of G., instead of the occupiers, are to be rated to the relief of the poor if the assessable value of the house be assessed at less than £30 per annum. G. is within a borough. The occupier of a house in G., assessed at less than £30, claimed under Representation of the People Act, 1832 (c. 45), to be rated, & was rated, & paid the rates for three successive years; he did not during that period occupy the entire house:—Held: he had acquired a settlement, under Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, by being charged with the rates & paying them.—R. v. ST. GILES IN THE FIELDS (INHABITANTS) (1857), 7 E. & B. 205; 26 L. J. M. C. 55; 28 L. T. O. S. 250; 21 J. P. 564; 3 Jur. N. S. 291; 5 W. R. 236; 119 E. R. 1223.

Pauper was assessed to the poor as the occupier; but the landlord always paid the rate:—Held: the pauper did not gain a settlement by being charged with or assessed to, & paying, the poor rate, under Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, or Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 66.—*R. v. 928. — No entry of sum assessed.]—When the title of the rate is, so much in the pound, & the pauper's name is inserted in the rate, & also his yearly rent, though nothing is written against his name in the column of sums assessed, this is a sufficient rating for the purpose of gaining a settlement.—*R. v. 932. — ]—In a settlement case depending upon the pauper's being rated, the justices at the sessions must state, as a fact, whether the landlord or tenant were rated; & if they only state the evidence of that fact, this ct. will send the case down to be restated.

933. — Before payment of rate.]—The town & parish of B. is for the convenience of the overseers divided into twelve divisions under the superintendence of so many overseers respectively, each of whom copies the name out of the general rate into a separate book of such of the inhabitants assessed as are within his district; & it is the custom of the parish for each overseer to add such names to his book as ought to be inserted in the general rate; such addition is not in fact made till the next year; but in the meanwhile the general rate is from time to time ordered to be collected with the additions:—Held: a person paying the rate whose name is afterwards added in the overseer's Book does not thereby gain a settlement; aliter if his name be so added before he paid the rate.—*R. v. 935. — Discrepancy in different rates.]—A separate & distinct dwelling-house & land in the parish of H. were let to W. A. & T. A., as joint tenants, the rent & value of the land, taken separately, being sufficient to confer a settlement on both. The farm was occupied by W., T. residing on another farm at a distance. T. paid the whole rent of the farm. The overseers of H. had always demanded & received payment of the rates in respect of the house & farm in question from T.: & in the rate books of H., "Atkinson, Mr." appeared as the name of the occupier of the farm in two rates, & "Atkinson, Thomas" in a third:—Held: the sessions were justified in finding that there was a sufficient occupation & payment of rent by W., & a sufficient assessment of him & payment of the rates by him, to give him a settlement in H. under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), & that he had been sufficiently charged with, & paid his share of, the public taxes of H. to gain a settlement under Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11).—*R. v. 939. —.]—A man & his wife had for some years lived apart, the wife living in the parish of M. In Nov. 1841, she became possessed of a house by devise in that parish, & occupied & was rated for it in her own married name; a few months after the man came & cohabited with his wife for about four months, & a rate which had been made before he came into the parish was paid by the wife while he was living with her. The man then left, & never returned, but was supported by his wife, who continued to be rated in her own name, & paid the rates, up to the time of his becoming lunatic & chargeable to another parish. The parish officers of M. had never dealt with or recognised the man as a ratepayer:—Held: on a case in which the ct. were to draw inferences of fact, the man had not obtained a settlement in M. under Poor Relief Act, 1691 (c. 11), s. 6, as there was no knowledge of him shown on the part of the parish officers.—*R. v. His examination was: J. M. “on his oath saith that he now produces the poor rate books of the said parish of P. for the years 1840 & 1841.” The other examinations proved the renting, occupation, & payment of the rates, for which receipts were exhibited, signed by the collector of P., but no further mention was made of the rate books or their contents, nor was any extract added:—Held: the examinations were sufficient, for it must be presumed that the removing justices inspected the rate book; & if there was any mode in which the material entries could have been annexed to the examinations, that addition was not necessary for the information of appts. the book itself being in their custody.—*R. v. ## SECT. 9.—SETTLEMENT BY ESTOPPEL

SUB-SECT. 1.—GRANT OF RELIEF AS EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT.

A. Within Parish.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 116.

942. General rule.—Where a case from the sessions only stated the bare fact of a pauper's having received relief from resp.'s parish:—Held: this was not even prima facie evidence of a settlement there, since he might have been relieved as casual poor, which the overseers were bound to do if wanted, whether the pauper were settled there or not. Hearsay evidence of a fact is not to be received upon a question of settlement, though the party who gave the information respecting her own settlement were dead.—R. v. CHADDERTON (INHABITANTS) (1801), 2 East, 27; 102 E. R. 278. Annotations:—Foll. R. v. Chatham (1807), 8 East, 498; R. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1844), 5 Q. B. 872.

943. —.]—Giving parish relief to a pauper within the parish is no evidence of his settlement there. In the instance in question the relief was administered at one time for a fortnight, & at another time for a longer period in the parish workhouse.—R. v. CHATHAM (INHABITANTS) (1807), 8 East, 498; 103 E. R. 434.

Annotations:—Foll. R. v. Coleorton (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 25; R. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1844), 5 Q. B. 872. Reid. R. v. Trowbridge (1827), 7 B. & C. 252; Paynter v. Williams (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 810.

944. —.]—The fact of a poor child being first found in a particular parish, is no evidence of his having been born there; & his being maintained by that parish for several years, & afterwards occasionally relieved by them for several weeks together, does not amount either to an admission, or to conclusive evidence, of his being settled there:—Semble: relief given to a pauper is no evidence of his being settled in the relieving parish.—R. v. TROWBRIDGE (INHABITANTS) (1827), 7 B. & C. 252; 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 7; 1 Man. & Ry. M. O. 71; 6 L. J. O. S. M. C. 7; 108 E. R. 717.

Annotations:—Reid. R. v. Coleorton (1830), 8 L. J. O. S. M. C. 118; R. v. Lydeard St. Lawrence (1841), 10 L. J. M. C. 147.

945. —.]—The examinations upon which an order of removal from B. to W. was made, disclosed the following facts. The pauper was born a bastard in a third parish; but his mother, before her confinement, was told by the parish officers that they would not allow her to remain there unless she obtained a certificate from W. acknowledging that she was settled in that parish, & pregnant. She did remain; & at the time of her confinement the parish officers of W. paid £2 for the relief of herself & her child. She afterwards, in about two months, went abroad, leaving her child in the care of her mother, & for six years the parish officers of W. paid a weekly sum for the relief of the child, who during the whole time lived in the care of his grandmother in the third parish:—Held: this was evidence of an admission by the parish officers of W. of the existence of a certificate acknowledging the settlement of the pauper's mother in their parish at the time when she was pregnant; & it was unnecessary to give any evidence of search for the certificate itself.—R. v. BASINGSTOKE (INHABITANTS) (1850), 14 Q. B. 611; 4 New Mag. Cas. 37; 4 New Sess. Cas. 80; 19 L. J. M. C. 97; 14 L. T. O. S. 372; 14 J. P. 75; 14 Jur. 246; 117 E. R. 237.

946. — In case of illness.—A pauper, who cannot be removed by reason of sickness, shall not thereby gain a settlement.—WALSEWORTH v. TEWING (1676), 1 Freem. K. B. 433; 3 Keb. 673; 9 E. R. 323.

947. — In joint poor-house.—R. v. ST. PETER & ST. PAUL, BATH (INHABITANTS) (1782), Cald. Mag. Cas. 213; 1 Bott, 432.

Annotation:—Foll. R. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1844), 5 Jur. 467.

948. — Relief long continued—& one child apprenticed by parish.—Relief given by a parish to a family resident in it, is no evidence of settlement, though the relief be continued for a long period, & though one of the family be put out apprentice by the parish.—R. v. COLEORTON (INHABITANTS) (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 25; 8 L. J. O. S. M. C. 118; 109 E. R. 697.

Annotations:—Consol. R. v. St. George, Exeter (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 373. Reid. R. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1844), 5 Q. B. 872.

Sect. 9.—Settlement by estoppel: Sub-sect. 1, A. & B.; sub-sect. 2, A. (a).]

949. Application of rule—Relief in house maintained outside parish—For relief of poor.]—Relief given by parish officers in a place out of their parish, but where they, by contract, have their paupers maintained, is the same in legal effect, as to settlement, as relief within the parish, & is therefore not prima facie evidence that the pauper is settled in the relieving parish. Although it do not appear that such place was parish property, or established according to any statute for building or providing parish houses.—R. v. ST. GILES IN THE FIELDS (INHABITANTS) (1844), 5 Q. B. 872; 1 Day. & Mer. 110; 1 New Mag. Cas. 6; 1 New Sess. Cas. 137; 13 L. J. M. C. 89; 3 L. T. O. S. 54; 8 J. P. 692; 8 Jur. 467; 114 E. R. 1477.

B. Outside Parish.

950. General rule.]—Relief given to a pauper while he is residing out of the relieving parish, is prima facie evidence of a settlement in that parish; & evidence of one instance in which relief was so given was held to be sufficient to warrant a finding by the sessions that the pauper was settled in the relieving parish, although upon a second application relief had been refused.—R. v. EDWINSTOWE (INHABITANTS) (1828), 8 B. & C. 671; 7 L. J. O. S. M. C. 30; Pratt, 305; 108 E. R. 1192.
Annotation:—Reld. R. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (1844), 1 New Sess. Cas. 137.

951. —.]—Relief given to a pauper not residing in the relieving parish is prima facie evidence of his being settled there; but the sessions are not bound upon such evidence only to find that he is settled in the relieving parish; & therefore, where, upon the trial of an appeal, the pauper proved relief given to him by applt. parish while resident in another parish, the sessions having quashed the order of removal, this ct. refused to disturb the decision.—R. v. YARWELL (INHABITANTS) (1829), 9 B. & C. 894; 4 Man. & Ry. K. B. 684; 2 Man. & Ry. M. C. 394; 8 L. J. O. S. M. C. 8; 109 E. R. 332.

952. —.]—R. v. CARNARVONSHIRE JJ., No. 1539, post.

953. —.]—The examination of a pauper, a widow, purported to set up a settlement for her late husband by hiring & service in R., but the statement was defective. The examination also set out the fact that relief had been administered to the husband then residing in C., the removing parish, by the overseer of R., on the ground that he was a parishioner of R.:—Held: on the latter ground the order of removal was to be supported.—R. v. CAMROSE (INHABITANTS) (1843), 2 Q. B. 330; 1 L. T. O. S. 108; 7 J. P. 335; 114 E. R. 129.

954. —.]—Where an order of removal has been confirmed by the sessions, subject to a case reserved, & the original order is thereupon brought up by certiorari, the ct. will not notice defects on the face of the order not noticed in the case: although such defects were mentioned in moving for the certiorari. "While in the parish of N. I received monthly relief from H." parish, & "I was relieved in the workhouse" of N. "by the parish of H." These statements in the examination of a pauper were held sufficient evidence of acknowledgment by parochial relief to warrant an order of removal to H.—R. v. HARTFURY (INHABITANTS) (1847), 8 Q. B. 566; 2 New Mag. Cas. 185; 2 New Sess. Cas. 648; 16 L. J. M. C. 105; 9 L. T. O. S. 196; 11 J. P. 458; 11 Jur. 486; 115 E. R. 989.

955. —.]—R. v. ST. MARY, BUNGAY (INHABITANTS), No. 1286, post.

956. Whether conclusive.]—R. v. YARWELL (INHABITANTS), No. 951, ante.

957. Refusal of second application.]—R. v. EDWINSTOWE (INHABITANTS), No. 950, ante.

958. Application of rule—Son of person relieved—Residence with person relieved not proved.]—A pauper was removed to parish A. on examinations which showed that he had gained no settlement in his own right, & that when the pauper was twenty-seven years old his father had received relief from parish A., while resident elsewhere:—Held: sufficient, for that emancipation was not to be presumed. Although it was not stated that the pauper, at the time in question, was resident with his father or formed part of his family.—R. v. LILLESALL (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 158; 1 New Sess. Cas. 576; 14 L. J. M. C. 97; 5 L. T. O. S. 71; 9 J. P. 439; 9 Jur. 407; 115 E. R. 448.

959. Authorisation of grant—Necessity for.]—Relief given by the relieving officer of a union, as on behalf of parish W., to paupers residing in parish M., both in the union, is no evidence of a settlement in W., without proof that such relief was authorised, or at least known & not objected to, by a guardian of the union acting for W., or by its overseer.—R. v. LITTLE MARLOW (INHABITANTS) (1847), 10 Q. B. 223; 2 New Mag. Cas. 81; 2 New Sess. Cas. 576; 16 L. J. M. C. 70; 8 L. T. O. S. 448; 11 J. P. 133; 11 Jur. 240; 116 E. R. 86.

Annotations:—Distd. R. v. Hartpury (1847), 2 New Mag. Cas. 185; Appld. R. v. Pott Shrigley (1848), 12 Q. B. 143. Reld. R. v. Crondall (1847), 10 Q. B. 812.

960. —What is sufficient evidence of authority.]—A statement by the relieving officer of a union, that he relieved a pauper out of the funds in his hands on account of a particular township in the union, is not sufficient to prove the pauper's chargeability to that township.—R. v. BRADFORD (INHABITANTS) (1846), 8 Q. B. 571, n.; 1 New Mag. Cas. 522; 2 New Sess. Cas. 330; 15 L. J. M. C. 117; 7 L. T. O. S. 158; 10 J. P. 375; 10 Jur. 753; 116 E. R. 990.

961. —.]—On application for an order of removal, the pauper was sworn before the justices; & her evidence was taken down in writing by the attorney for the parish applying for the order, who acted in that character only, & not as clerk to the justices; the writing was signed by the pauper; but no jurat was added to the writing; nor was it signed by the justices. At a subsequent hearing, the pauper was again examined, & her evidence taken down in writing; to this writing a jurat was added; & it was signed by the justices; & a copy was sent to the parish to which the removal was made:—Held: it was not necessary, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, that a copy of the former writing should be also sent. Relief given to a pauper by order of the board of guardians of a union, on account of a particular parish therein, is evidence, on appeal by such parish against an order of removal, that the relief was given by its authority.—R. v. CRONDALL (INHABITANTS) (1847), 10 Q. B. 812; 2 New Mag. Cas. 192; 2 New Sess. Cas. 667; 16 L. J. M. C. 175; 9 L. T. O. S. 266; 11 J. P. 486; 11 Jur. 922; 116 E. R. 308.

973. ———.]—After an order of removal not appealed from, a new settlement can only be gained by some act or cause altogether subsequent to the removal. Therefore if a pauper in service at A. under a hiring for a year, be removed to B., & does not appeal, but returns in a few days to his master at A., is received by him, serves out the year, & is paid his full wages, yet he gains no settlement at A.—*R. v. G. was received into an asylum, being sent thither from L., as a pauper lunatic; & subsequently two justices, on inquiry, adjudicated that the settlement of E. G. was in H., & made an order of maintenance accordingly. H. having appealed, the order was confirmed by the sessions, subject to a case which stated the above facts, & which also found that the two children were, at the time of the first order, unemancipated, & were, by that order, adjudged to be settled in H. on the ground of W. G.'s settlement in H., which facts did not appear by the order, & also that in fact E. G. was not settled in H.:—Held: the first order, unappealed against, was conclusive proof that E. G. was settled in H.—It. v. HARTINGTON MIDDLE QUARTER (INHABITANTS) (1855), 4 E. & B. 780; 3 C. L. R. 554; 24 L. J. M. C. 98; 24 L. T. O. S. 327; 19 J. P. 150; 1 Jur. N. S. 586; 3 W. R. 285; 119 E. 981. ————]—Two justices made an order under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, ss. 38, 41, for removing a lunatic pauper mentioned in the order as chargeable to the township of D., & thereby directed the overseers of D. to remove her to the county lunatic asylum; the charges of removal, maintenance, etc., to be paid by the county treasurer, as the pauper's settlement was unknown. Two other justices, by a subsequent order, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 42, reciting the first order, & its execution, adjudged, after inquiry by them, that the pauper's settlement was in D., & directed the overseers of D. to reimburse the county treasurer, & to pay, at a certain rate, for the pauper's future maintenance, etc. On appeal against this order, it appeared that the first order was applied for by the assistant overseer of D., the nature of whose duties, however, was not proved; & that the overseers of D. removed the pauper in obedience to the first order. That order did not mention any person as the party applying for it:—Held: the overseers of D., not having appealed against the first order, were precluded from alleging, as a ground of appeal against the second, that the former order was made without legal proof of chargeability.—R. v. HOLDSWORTH (1841), 1 Q. B. 221; 1 Gal. & Dav. 442; 10 L. J. M. C. 57; 5 J. P. 226; 5 Jur. 768; 113 E. R. 1114.

982. ————]—Order not executed by actual removal.]—Where after an order of removal the parish of settlement acquiesces in it by relieving the pauper in the removing parish, the order, though not executed by actual removal, is, upon proof that it was unappealed against, a conclusive adjudication against all persons of the settlement of the pauper at the date of the order.—CLIFTON UNION v. LIVERPOOL OVERSEERS (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 540; 41 J. P. 599; sub nom. R. v. CLIFTON UNION, 46 L. J. M. C. 209.

983. ————]—As against component townships of parish—Effect of one township separating.]—A pauper was removed by order of justices to the parish of H., so named in the order, which consisted of several townships, maintaining their poor jointly. The order was acquiesced in. Afterwards one of the townships, O., separated itself from the parish, under Poor Relief Act, 1862 (c. 12), s. 21, & from thenceforth maintained its own poor. The pauper was subsequently removed to the township of O., so named in the order of removal, from the parish of W. On appeal against the order, resps. having put in the order of removal to H., O. offered evidence that the pauper was not settled in that particular township, before its separation from H. The sessions rejected the evidence:—Held: the former order upon H. was not conclusive against O. on appeal against an order directed to O. as a distinct township; & the case was sent back to be reheard.—R. v. OLDBURY (INHABITANTS) (1835), 4 Ad. & El. 167; 1 Har. & W. 554; 5 Nev. & M. 984. Order for removal of father—How far conclusive as to settlement of children—Born subsequently.]—An order unappealed from to remove a man & his wife is conclusive as to after-born children.—*NYMPFIELD PARISH v. 986. ————]—An order of removal was made on an examination which showed that the pauper never acquired a settlement for himself, but was emancipated in 1823; that his father was apprentice in L. in 1790, & was removed to L. under an order of removal in 1838, against which L. had not appealed, but had subsequently maintained the father; the examinations did not set forth the circumstances of the apprenticeship so as to prove that the father acquired a settlement in L. thereby, but they showed that the father never gained a settlement after the apprenticeship:—Held: the order, unappealed against, for the removal of the father, was conclusive evidence of the settlement of the son.—R. v. BRIGHTHELMSTON (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 549; 1 New Mag. Cas. 349; 2 New Sess. Cas. 7; 14 L. J. M. C. 137; 5 L. T. O. S. 194; 9 J. P. 599; 9 Jur. 775; 115 E. R. 596.

987. Order for removal of wife—Whether conclusive as to settlement of husband.]—An order removing a woman as the wife of A., is, if unappealed from, conclusive against the parish as to the settlement of A.; for by calling her his wife it imports that the removal was to his settlement.—R. v. HINXWORTH (INHABITANTS) (1778), 2 Bott, 713; Cald. 990. Order for removal of husband & wife—Conclusive as to all derivative settlements.]—An order of removal unappealed against is conclusive not only on the parties removed, but also as to all derivative settlements under them.

If A. & B. be removed as man & wife from X. to Y., & there be no appeal against the order, it is conclusive, not only as to A. & B. though they be not married, but also as to their children, though illegitimate.—R. v. ST. MARY, LAMBETH (INHABITANTS) (1796), 6 Term Rep. 615; 2 Bott, 717; 101 E. R. 733.

991. — Conclusive as to marriage & settlement.—An order of removal of J. S. & B. his wife, made upon the examination of the wife, adjudging that they lately came into the parish of K. & are likely to become chargeable to it, & were last legally settled in M., is good upon the face of it, & conclusive upon the parish of M. as to the marriage & settlement of the husband & wife; so that upon a subsequent removal of the wife, describing her as B. S., single woman, from M. to B., M. cannot show in evidence that the marriage was null & void.—R. v. BINEGAR (INHABITANTS) (1806), 7 East, 377; 2 Bott, 721; 3 Smith, K. B. 353; 103 E. R. 146.

992. Order for removal of brother — Whether conclusive as to settlement of sister—Father's settlement only arising collaterally.—Upon the trial of an appeal at quarter sessions, resp. parish proved relief granted to the father of the pauper by applt. parish before the year 1815. Applt. parish then tendered an order of sessions made in the year 1815, quashing an order of justices for the removal of the brother of the pauper to applt. parish. They tendered parol evidence to show that the ground of the decision of the ct. of quarter sessions was, that the father of the pauper had not at that time any settlement in applt. parish, & consequently, that the son had not any derivative settlement there:—Held: even if parol evidence was admissible to prove the ground of the decision of the sessions, still that the order of sessions was not evidence that the father of the pauper was not settled in applt. parish in 1815, because the father's settlement was a matter that arose collaterally on the trial of the first appeal.—R. v. KNAPTOTT (INHABITANTS) (1824), 2 B. & C. 883; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 469; 2 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 347; 2 Bott, 794; 107 E. R. 610.

993. — — — — — (1) On appeal against an order removing Frederick B. from the parish of M. to that of S., resps., alleging a derivative settlement from the father of Frederick, put in a former order, removing the family of Samuel B., the brother of Frederick, from M. to S., in the usual form, & the examination of Samuel B., the elder, father of Frederick & Samuel, on which the last mentioned order was granted, showing that he, Samuel, the elder, was settled in S.:—Held: the last mentioned order was not of itself evidence to prove the settlement of Frederick B. in S.; & the examinations could not be received as showing the ground on which that order was granted.

(2) Resps. proved that, when the former order was made, the overseer of M. delivered it, with the examinations, to the overseer of S.; that the paupers were removed under it; & that S. never appealed:—Held: this was evidence of an admission by S. that the settlement of Samuel, the father, was correctly stated in the examinations; & therefore, the examinations, as part of such evidence, were admissible on the appeal against the removal of Frederick.—R. v. SOW (INHABITANTS) (1843), 4 Q. B. 93; 2 Gal. & Dav. 537;

994. Order for removal of mother & child — Whether conclusive as to legitimacy of child.—On a case from sessions, upon appeal against the removal of R. from T. to C. in 1856, it was stated that in 1837 a woman named S. W., “& Ann, aged six weeks, her daughter,” were removed by order from P. to C., & that in fact C. was then the place of settlement of both S. W. & Ann: that this order was not appealed against: & that Ann was born in P., & was the same person as R.: that C., applt. parish, on the trial of the appeal, offered proof of the illegitimacy of R., & that the sessions held that C. was precluded, by the order of 1837, from giving such proof, & affirmed the order of 1856. This ct. quashed the order of sessions, holding that C. was not estopped from giving proof of the illegitimacy, inasmuch as, assuming the order of 1837 to assert the fact of legitimacy, that fact was immaterial to the removal of S. W. & Ann, & therefore was not admitted by not appealing against such removal.—R. v. CAERWYS (INHABITANTS) (1858), 8 E. & B. 720; 30 L. T. O. S. 256; 22 J. P. Jo. 52; 120 E. R. 267.

1004. ———.]—Settlement of pauper born of void marriage—Marriage declared void after confirmation of removal order.]—D. & E. were removed, by an order describing them as man & wife, with their six children, named in the order of removal, to W. The order was appealed against. Pending the appeal, the parish officers of W. instituted a suit in the Spiritual Ct. to dissolve the marriage as incestuous. After this, the order was confirmed; & subsequently, the Spiritual Ct. decreed the marriage incestuous, & void from the beginning to all intents & purposes. Pauper was born of the supposed marriage, before the order, but he was not named in it, & he was unemancipated, & had gained no settlement, when the order was made:—Held: the confirmation of the order, under these circumstances, was not conclusive proof of a derivative settlement of the pauper in W., on appeal against an order removing the pauper to W. after the decree of the Spiritual Ct., but, on such appeal, W. might show, by the decree, that, since the first order, the marriage had become void ab initio & the pauper illegitimate.—*R. v. 1005. Whether decision need be on merits.]—On appeal against a removal from H. to M., the ground of appeal stated was a subsequent settlement in a third township, E., by renting a tenement; but, the notice of grounds stating no residence in E., the sessions confirmed the order. Afterwards, the pauper was removed from M. to E., on the same ground of settlement properly stated. E. appealed, stating, as a ground, the confirmation of the former order:—Held: this was conclusive against M.; & the sessions having confirmed the order of removal to E., considering the former decision not to have been on the merits, this Ct. quashed such order of confirmation, holding the former decision to have been on the merits.—*R. v. 1016. — Question for sessions.—On consideration of grounds.]—On appeal against an order of removal from C. to B., the ground of appeal was, that a former order of removal from C. to B. had been quashed on appeal. On trial of the present appeal, it was shown that the first order had been quashed because the examination did not give the date of the birth of the pauper's husband. On the present appeal, the sessions quashed the second order, subject to a case, which stated that the first order was quashed because the sessions, on the first appeal, thought the omission material. This ct. confirmed the second order of sessions, no ground being shown on which their finding, as to the view taken by the sessions on the first appeal, could be treated as incorrect.—*R. v. 1017. — — — — —.]—When on appeal against an order adjudging the settlement of a pauper, a case has been reserved by the sessions for the opinion of the Ct. of Q. B., the judgment of that ct. thereon, & the reasons for it, are adopted by the sessions; and if, therefore, the order is quashed generally, it is competent to the sessions to inquire on a future occasion whether the judgment turned on the question of settlement.—R. v. St. PETER'S, DROITWICH (INHABITANTS) (1847), 9 Q. B. 886; 2 New Mag. Cas. 68; 2 New Sess. Cas. 531; 16 L. J. M. C. 38; 8 L. T. O. S. 363; 11 J. P. 212; 11 Jur. 225; 115 E. R. 1514.

1018. — — — — —.]—Applts., at sessions, relied upon the quashing of a former order of removal, relating to the same paupers, on the trial of an appeal between the same parishes. The entry made by the ct. as to that order was, that it was quashed by consent of parties, for the "informality & insufficiency of the examinations." The sessions having, on the subsequent appeal, decided, subject to the opinion of this ct., that the order was quashed on grounds which did not make the quashing conclusive:—Held: the sessions had a right to decide this on consideration of the circumstances before them, & this ct. ought not to interfere with their finding.—R. v. DUKINFIELD (INHABITANTS) (1848), 11 Q. B. 678; 2 New Mag. Cas. 393; 3 New Sess. Cas. 126; 17 L. J. M. C. 113; 10 L. T. O. S. 522; 12 J. P. 230; 12 Jur. 674; 116 E. R. 627.

1020. — — — — —.]—A judgment of the ct. of quarter sessions quashing an order for the removal of a pauper, with the consent of resp. parish, is conclusive evidence to relieve applt. parish on any subsequent dispute between these parishes as to the settlement of the same pauper at that time; & if not prima facie evidence that the settlement is in the unsuccessful parish, is, at least, sufficient to call upon that parish to show a settlement somewhere.—KINGSBURY (INHABITANTS) v.

COLESHILL (INHABITANTS) (1827), 5 L. J. O. S. M. C. 130.

1021. — Pending order not affected by subsequent statute.]—An order for the removal of a pauper to the place of his birth settlement confirmed by sessions subject to a case, was quashed on the ground that the facts showed a settlement which the pauper derived from his grandfather. Between the order at sessions & the decision upon the case, Divided Parish & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), abolishing a derivative settlement, such as that above mentioned, became law, & a fresh order for the removal of the pauper to the place of his birth settlement was made:—Held: such order must be quashed, for the quashing of the first order was a conclusive adjudication of a settlement of the pauper, inasmuch as the facts upon which it proceeded were unaltered, & its validity could not be affected by a subsequent change in the law, & further, because it must be taken to be an order "pending" at the date of the Act, & therefore under sect. 36 excluded from its operation.—*BARTON REGIS UNION v. to Aug. 1829; whereupon the sessions quashed the order. Afterwards, the same pauper was removed from B. to C. on a fresh examination of himself, stating the settlement as before, but with the right dates. The order was objected to, on the ground that the former order was conclusive between B. & C.:—Held: it was so: &, the sessions having affirmed the order, this ct. quashed the order of sessions.—R. v. CLINT (INHABITANTS) (1841), 11 Ad. & El. 624, n.; 1 Gal. & Dav. 245; 10 L. J. M. C. 151; 5 J. P. 783; 113 E. R. 551.

1027. ———.]—The sessions, on appeal, quashed an order of removal from P. to L., founded on examinations which stated a settlement by renting & occupying a house in L. for one year at £22 a year, & being assessed to the poor rate in L., which the party had paid as the occupier of the said house, during his occupation. The ground of appeal was that the examination was defective as not stating in what year or years the party rented & occupied; or that the house was rented by him in L., or occupied, under a yearly hiring & the rent to the amount of £10 actually paid for one whole year at the least, or that such house was actually occupied under a yearly hiring by him & the rent, etc., paid by him for the same, or that he had been assessed to the poor rate & paid the same in respect of such house for one year. The order of sessions stated the order of removal to be quashed on the ground of the "examination" "disclosing no settlement on the face thereof, & appts. having given notice thereof in their grounds of appeal." The pauper being removed again from P. to L., it was stated, & relied upon, as a ground of appeal, that the examinations did not show any settlement acquired since the above order of sessions; & in fact no new settlement appeared. The sessions, however, confirmed the new order of removal, subject to a case, stating all the circumstances of the former decision, & submitting, as the question for this ct., whether or not the former order of sessions was conclusive:—Held: this ct., being enabled by the case stated to see that the former order of sessions had disposed of the substantial question, might pronounce that order conclusive, though the sessions, by their last order, had decided the contrary, & the latter order was quashed.—R. v. ST. MARY, LAMBETH (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 587; 1 New Mag. Cas. 359; 2 New Sess. Cas. 36; 14 L. J. M. C. 126; 5 L. T. O. S. 196; 9 J. P. 552; 9 Jur. 758; 115 E. R. 610.

At the sessions this order was "on motion of said resps., set aside for insufficiency of examination." Afterwards resps. again removed the paupers to applt. township on an examination disclosing substantially the same grounds of settlement as before:—Held: the first order of sessions was conclusive between the parties on the point of settlement.—R. v. ELLAL (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 593; 2 New Sess. Cas. 39; 14 L. J. M. C. 127, n.; 9 J. P. 744; 9 Jur. 758; 115 E. R. 613.

1030. What is "on merits"—Respondents declining to go into case.]—On appeal against an order of removal grounded on a settlement by hiring & service, resps., discovering that the examination served by them on appls. did not state a residence in applt. parish, moved, at the sessions, to discharge their own order, & it was quashed, generally, with the consent of appls., no reason, however, being stated either to appls. or to the justices. Resps. afterwards removed the pauper again to the same parish, no change of circumstances having intervened; &, on appeal, contended that the discharge of the former order was not conclusive, the merits not having been in question:—Held: the order was conclusive.

The order appeared to have been suspended, &, on appeal against the present order, it was objected, on the hearing, that the examinations did not show that the suspension had been regularly taken off, or the order of removal executed. The sessions held the objections fatal; but, to give an opportunity of removing again, they entered on their records that the order was discharged "not on the merits"; appls.' counsel objecting, & insisting on their right to have the appeal fully tried, so as finally to dispose on the ground of removal. On motion for a mandamus to the sessions to erase the words "not on the merits," or to enter continuances & hear the appeal:—Held: the entry was wrong, for the decisions was a conclusive one upon the point of settlement.—*Ex p. 1032. Presumption that quashing "on merits".]—Pauper's father was born in the parish of S.; & pauper's mother & her family, after the father's death, were relieved by S., while resident in another parish, down to 1817, when pauper was apprenticed, but not so as to gain a settlement. In 1824, the mother was removed, by order describing her as the widow of pauper's father, to S.; but the order was quashed on appeal. Pauper was then twenty-six years old; he was not named in the order of 1824; nor did it appear where he had resided since 1817, except as above mentioned:—Held: (1) on appeal against a subsequent order of justices removing pauper to S., the discharge of the order made in 1824 was material evidence for S.; (2) in the absence of proof to the contrary, it must be presumed that the order of 1824 was discharged on the merits as to settlement, & it could not be presumed, in the absence of proof, that the pauper was at that time emancipated.—*R. v. 1034. ———.]—An order of sessions, quashing an order of removal generally, is conclusive evidence between the parties to the appeal, that when the order of removal was made, applt. parish was not bound to receive the pauper, but it is only prima facie evidence that the pauper was not settled in that parish; & therefore, upon the trial of an appeal between the same parishes against a second order of removal of the same party, the removing parish may show by parol evidence that the first order of removal was quashed on the ground that the pauper resided on a tenement of his own, which made him irremovable, though it did not confer a settlement; & that he afterwards sold the tenement, & thereby became removable.—*R. v. 1048. —.]—(1) A certificate person cannot be removed under Poor Removal Act, 1896 (c. 30), till he is actually chargeable. Therefore a probability that one of the certificated persons residing together in one family, will become chargeable, as if a female be pregnant with a bastard, is no cause for removing them, & where relief was given to a son & grandson living in a separate house from the father, it was no ground to remove him & his other children, living with him. But that part of the family only which was chargeable was removable.

(2) A certificate promising to receive the paupers when requested, means only when they shall be legally requested, namely, being requested by two justices when the paupers become chargeable. If it meant to receive them before they became chargeable, it would be void under Poor Removal Act, 1896 (c. 30), for a certificate is only binding when it is conformable to that statute.—*R. v. ST. 1049. —.]—A hired a house for £10 a year, & put into it his furniture, worth above £15, & lived in it above a year. Having applied for relief, the parish officers were compelled by a magistrate's order to grant it. After the relief was granted, the landlord demanded his rent, but allowed A. a fortnight's time to pay it. Before that time expired, & before the rent was paid, the pauper was removed to another parish by an order of two justices. After he had been removed, he sold his furniture, & paid the year's rent:—Held: the parish officers having been compelled to grant relief, A. had thereby become actually chargeable, & was therefore removable by Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), although he had resided above forty days on the tenement.

It is said that although he had in fact received relief from that parish, yet as he possessed property, he was not actually chargeable. But I think that, as the parish did not act fraudulently, & as they were compelled to grant him relief by an order of justices, the pauper is to be deemed as actually chargeable (BAYLEY, J.).

Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), take away the power of removing . . . persons likely to become chargeable, but gives the power to remove persons actually chargeable, at any time after they have become so & before they have actually gained a settlement in the removing parish (BAYLEY, J.).—*R. v. Affidavits in support of a like motion stated that the party subpoenaed came to the petty sessions, held before "two justices of the peace," not stating them to be of the quorum; that another witness was first examined, & that the justices then required the subpoenaed party to be sworn, but that he refused, not objecting to the jurisdiction, but denying that he was bound to give evidence against his own parish:—Held: the quorum authority might be presumed, from the acting of the justices, & because the party subpoenaed, though he took an objection before them, did not dispute their jurisdiction.

(2) It is no answer to such motion for attachment that the subpoena was issued & served before any complaint of chargeability had been made.

1051. —.]—Two children under the age of sixteen resided with their father, who was a sailor in the Royal Navy, in the Medway union continuously from 1903 to 1913. Previously to 1903 the father was legally settled in the Doncaster union. The father never became chargeable in the Medway union. The children having become chargeable in the Woolwich union, an order was made adjudging that their last legal settlement was in the Doncaster union, & ordering their removal to that union:—Held: (1) the father, by reason of his being a sailor, never acquired a status of irremovability in the Medway union & was always removable from the union, although under Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), s. 1, he could not in fact have been removed until he had become chargeable; (2) the father being removable, the children were also removable; (3) the children, therefore, did not obtain a settlement in the Medway union by residence under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, & (4) the children's last legal settlement was in the Doncaster union.—DONCASTER UNION v. WOOLWICH UNION, [1915] 1 K. B. 563; 84 L. J. K. B. 494; 112 L. T. 870; 79 J. P. 213; 13 L. G. R. 451, D. C.

1052. — & inhabiting.]—In order to give justices jurisdiction to remove a pauper to the place of his legal settlement, he must be inhabiting in & chargeable to the parish from which he is removed. The chargeability & inhabiting must be concurrent:—Held: therefore, an order of removal, made before the passing of Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 56, could not be supported upon an examination which only proved that the pauper was receiving relief from the removing parish in an union workhouse not stated to be situate in that parish.—R. v. SILCHESTER (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 L. T. O. S. 374; 13 J. P. 51.

SUB-SECT. 2.—WHAT CONSTITUTES CHARGEABILITY.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), ss. 42, 121, 128.

1053. Question of law.]—It is not sufficient evidence to ground the removal of a pauper, if the pauper, or other witnesses, state in the examinations that the pauper is "chargeable" to the removing parish; chargeability being a conclusion of law, to be inferred by the justices from evidence of the pauper's having received relief from the parish.—R. v. HIGH BICKINGTON (INHABITANTS) (1844), 3 Q. B. 790; 1 Dav. & Mer. 103; 1 New Mag. Cas. 1; 1 New Sess. Cas. 121; 13 L. J. M. C. 74; 3 L. T. O. S. 52; 8 J. P. 490; 8 Jur. 377; 114 E. #### SUB-SECT. 3.—PROOF OF CHARGEABILITY.

1056. Statement that pauper "chargeable".]—R. v. HIGH BICKINGTON (INHABITANTS), No. 1053, ante.

1057. —.]—There must be legal evidence of the fact of the chargeability of a pauper to the removing parish in the examinations sent with an order of removal. A statement in the examinations, that a pauper is chargeable to the parish though coupled with a similar statement in the heading of the examinations, was held insufficient.—R. v. LIDFORD (INHABITANTS) (1844), 1 Dav. & Mer. 105; 1 New Mag. Cas. 50; 1 New Sess. Cas. 244; 8 J. P. 674.

1058. — & resident in workhouse.]—A statement that the pauper is residing in the workhouse in P., & is chargeable to the township of P., is sufficient evidence of chargeability.—R. v. MANCHESTER (INHABITANTS) (1845), 8 Q. B. 573; New Mag. Cas. 346; 2 New Sess. Cas. 15; 14 L. J. M. C. 126; 5 L. T. O. S. 172; 9 J. P. 599; 115 E. R. 991.

1059. Statement that pauper relieved—By relieving officer.]—Relief by a relieving officer of a union being no proof against any particular parish, there is no evidence to support chargeability where the relieving officer states that, pursuant to orders from the guardians, he relieved the pauper from the parochial funds, which orders were entered in a book not produced.—R. v. SHITLINGTON (INHABITANTS) (1845), 1 New Mag. Cas. 432; 6 L. T. O. S. 147; 9 J. P. Jo. 758.

SUB-SECT. 1.—WHAT PERSONS ARE IRREMOVABLE.

A. Holders of Estates.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 108 (7).

1061. Freeholder.]—A pauper cannot be removed from his freehold.—ANON. (1703), 6 Mod. Rep. 88; 87 B. R. 847.

1064. —.]—Where a pauper legally settled in the parish of A., having met with a severe accident in the parish of B., was carried into an adjacent parish to be cured, & remained there for a long period of time:—Held: he was to be considered as casual poor in the parish of C., & was irremovable; & an order of removal to A., suspended, under the powers of Poor Removal Act, 1065. —[J.—A pauper met with an accident in the parish of A., & was wrongfully removed, but with her own consent, to the parish of B. to which she belonged:—Held: being casual poor in A., the overseers of that parish were liable, without an express promise, to pay the expense of her cure in the parish of B.—TOMLINSON v. BENTALL (1826), 5 B. & C. 738; 8 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 403; 4 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 159; 5 L. J. O. S. M. C. 7; 108 E. R. 274.

1066. —Residence continued after recovery—Subsequent disablement by sickness.—[Pauper, having met with an accident in the parish of C. which rendered him helpless, was taken into the workhouse of the union of which C. was a part, & there remained for seven years, the effect of the accident having in the interval, it did not appear at what precise time, ceased sufficiently to make him capable of removal, & he having since become permanently disabled by chronic rheumatism, aggravated by the accident:—Held: he was removable to the parish of his settlement, as being chargeable to C., it made no difference that, at the time of the accident, he was virtually resident in a third parish & irremovable thence under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66).—R. v. CUCKFIELD (INHABITANTS) (1855), 5 E. & B. 523; 25 L. J. M. C. 4; 26 L. T. O. S. 58; 20 J. P. 196; 1 Jur. N. S. 1047; 4 W. R. 11; 119 E. R. 575.

1067. What amounts to "sickness"—Blindness.—[Two justices made an order for the removal of a pauper, & in the warrant stated that the pauper had not "become chargeable" to the removing parish "in respect of relief made necessary by sickness or accident." On appeal, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case stating, amongst other things, that the pauper was afflicted with incurable blindness, which was the original & continuing cause of his chargeability:—Held: blindness was sickness within Poor Relief Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 4; & the justices not having stated in the warrant that they were satisfied that the sickness would produce permanent disability, the warrant was bad.—R. v. BUCKNELL (INHABITANTS) (1854), 3 E. & B. 587; 2 C. L. R. 1534; 23 L. J. M. C. 129; 23 L. T. O. S. 142; 18 J. P. 503; 18 Jur. 533; 2 W. R. 427; 118 E. R. 1201.

1068. —Pregnancy.—[On appeal against an order of removal, the sessions stated for the opinion of the ct. a case: by which it appeared that the pauper was an able-bodied single woman, who, while in service, became pregnant, & was dismissed from the service; & by reason of her advanced state of pregnancy, was unable to take a situation & maintain herself. The removing justices had not found that she was chargeable in respect of relief made necessary by sickness, but only that she "has become & now is actually chargeable":—Held: it was not to be inferred that she had become chargeable in respect of any sickness; & the order of removal was not therefore objectionable under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 4, pregnancy not being necessarily sickness within

1069. —Mental deficiency.—[A pauper of weak intellect, whose place of settlement was in the W. union, & who had acquired a status of irremovability in the D. union, was found wandering in the B. union, where he became chargeable. At the time of his leaving the D. union he had not formed any intention of abandoning his residence in that union, & owing to his mental incapacity he was incapable of exercising any independent choice as to his place of residence, but his mental condition was not such as would justify his detention in a lunatic asylum:—Held: he was not a casual pauper in the B. union, & was removable therefrom under Poor Relief Act, 1862 (c. 12), to the W. union, notwithstanding the status of irremovability acquired in the D. union.—R. v. WAKEFIELD UNION (1883), 48 J. P. 326.

1072. Residence in different parishes—In same city.—[By a local Act, the governor, deputy governor & guardians of the poor of the City of Norwich were incorporated; & the corp. were to have the care & provide for the maintenance of all the poor of the several parishes within the city, & to exercise all the powers of churchwardens & overseers in the management & removal of the poor, & to institute & defend any appeal against any order relating to the poor; & all orders of removal were to be made on the complaint of the corp. The corp. was to apportion the sums to be raised for the relief of the poor among the several parishes, to be paid to the treasurer of the corp., & in fixing the proportion to be raised by the several parishes, were to calculate the same upon the whole annual value of the property liable in the city. Appeals against orders of removal from any parish within the city were to be made on notice to the corp. The corp., in 1846, obtained an order to remove a pauper from the parish of St. S. within the city to a parish out of the city. The pauper had resided in St. S. two years next before the application for the order, & in another parish of the same city twenty years immediately preceding the two years:—Held: Norwich was a "city" "maintaining its own poor," & therefore a "parish" within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 109, & Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, which Act, by sect. 8, is to be read as one Act with the former Act; & the pauper having resided five years in the city, though in different parishes, was irremovable.—*R. v. 1073. ———.]—The several parishes of the city & county of a city of E. are incorporated for the purpose of maintaining their poor out of a common fund; but in the case of appeals & orders of removal, the persons to set the law in motion, are the churchwardens & overseers of the individual parish, & not the corp. :—Held: the city of E. was a parish within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), as explained by sect. 109, the interpretation clause, of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, & a pauper who for five years next before the application for a warrant of removal has resided within such, was irremovable under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—*HOLY TRINITY, EXETER v. 1076. ———.]—The effect of Poor Removal Act, 1864 (c. 105), s. 1, in connection with Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, is to render a pauper irremovable from his parish of residence within a union to his parish of settlement in the same union, although his term of three years’ residence is computed by the time during which he lived in two or more parishes of the union, neither of which is his parish of settlement.—*R. v. 1077. ———.]—By Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, no person shall be removed from any parish in which he shall have resided for five years. By Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, & Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (c. 79), s. 8, residence in any part of a union is to have the same effect as a residence in a parish, & the period of residence is reduced to one year. By Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 12, the words used in that Act are to be construed as in Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76); & by sect. 109 of the latter Act “union” is to include amongst others, “any number of parishes incorporated for the relief or maintenance of the poor under any local Act.” By a local Act certain townships each separately maintaining its own poor, & several parishes were incorporated into a united district for the purpose of maintaining a house of industry for the poor of the whole district, under a board of directors. Each parish or township had the separate care of, & paid for the maintenance of, its own poor in the house, under the management of the directors; but each contributed according to a fixed proportion to the general costs of the maintenance of the house. The outdoor relief was left in the hands of the parish officers :—Held: the united district was a union within Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 109; & an aggregate residence of one year in two of the townships rendered a pauper irremovable.—*MACHYNLETH v. 1078. Residence in extra-parochial place.—A residence of five years in an extra-parochial place, part of which residence was before the coming into operation of Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (c. 19), does not confer the status of irremovability; that Act having no retrospective operation.—*R. v. ## B. What amounts to Break in Residence.

(a) In General.

1080. Removal procured by fraud.—(1) A pauper entitled to irremovability from M. by reason of a five years’ residence within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & as widow within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 2, went after the death of her husband to the relieving officer for M. & demanded relief; he told her that B. was the place of her settlement, & that if she went thither she would be relieved; & he gave her 10s. to pay her fare to B., & sent her to the B. railway station in company with two persons who saw her off. The pauper went to B., & stayed with her mother that night; the next morning she applied for relief, & was relieved for two or three weeks in the house. She then left the house & went to her mother’s, where she remained three weeks without relief. She then applied for & received parish relief at her mother’s for three months. She then returned to M., became chargeable, & an order for her removal was made. The sessions did not find as a fact that the officer of M. had induced & assisted the pauper to go to B., “with intent to cause” her “to become chargeable to a parish in which she was not then chargeable":—Held: the facts would have justified the sessions in so finding; if they had so found the going to B. would not have been a break of residence, & the case must be remitted to the sessions, as this ct. will not draw an inference of fraud or illegality, when a ct. of quarter sessions has not found it.

(2) Semble: a break of residence within the twelve months next after the death of a husband destroys the irremovability of his widow under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 2.—R. v. ST. MARYLBONE (INHABITANTS) (1851), 16 Q. B. 299; 4 New Sess. Cas. 444; 20 L. J. M. C. 173; 15 J. P. 258; 117 E. R. 893; sub nom. R. v. ST. MARYLBONE (INHABITANTS), Re LAWRENCE, 15 Jur. 289.

1081. —[Two unemancipated children & their mother, a widow, became chargeable to the P. union in Nov. 1901, the mother being then irremovable from P. by reason of one year's residence without interruption or relief. In the same month the mother ceased to have relief except on account of the children, who remained in the P. union schools & are still there, the mother went to her own home in P. In Feb. 1902, the mother removed to W. H. union leaving her children still chargeable to P. union:—Held: (1) the mother lost her status of irremovability from P. when she went to W. H., notwithstanding that the relief, through her children was uninterrupted; (2) an order for the removal of the children to W. H. was good, because the mother's irremovability from P. having gone, the children were removable to the parish of their last legal settlement; (3) a statement by the relieving officer of the P. union made to the mother to the effect that her removal to W. H. from P. would not make any difference to her children was not sufficient to prevent the irremovability from lapsing on the ground of fraud.—WEST HAM UNION v. POPLAR UNION (1902), 66 J. P. 504.

1082. Involuntary removal—To workhouse.—R. v. WEST WARD UNION, No. 1139, post.

—Nurse sent to branch hospital.—See Sub-sect. 2, B. (c), post.

1083. Absence at school.—H. was the illegitimate son (born in 1847 at R.) of a single woman, who married in 1858, & he lived with his mother & her husband, & was maintained by them. They had lived for more than a year in the parish of L. on Aug. 5, 1862, when H. was elected a pupil at "the School for the Indigent Blind," in another union, being then about fifteen years & six months old. The school was a charitable institution supported by voluntary contributions; the pupils were lodged, & clothed, & fed, as well as taught, out of the funds of the institution. The pupils were discharged by the committee when they were sufficiently instructed, or when they attained twenty-one years, or for misconduct. H. remained & continually resided at the school as a pupil until July 19, 1868, when he was discharged, being more than twenty-one years old. During his residence at the school he was wholly maintained, clothed, lodged, & fed out of the school funds, & neither his mother nor her husband contributed to his support; but he went to them at L., & lodged with them for five weeks in the summer of each of the years 1863, 1864, & 1865, & for six weeks in the summers of 1866 & 1867, & during those periods he was maintained by his mother & her husband. On his discharge from the school in July, 1868, H. returned to his mother & her husband at L., & was maintained by them till Mar. 1869, when he became chargeable to L. He had no other settlement than his birth settlement. On appeal against an order for the removal of H. to his place of settlement, quarter sessions drew the inference from the above facts that there was an animus revertendi in H.; & they held that he had constructively resided with his mother & her husband in L. for more than a year, & was therefore irremovable:—Held: the sessions were justified in deciding that the pauper had continued to reside with the parents, & was irremovable.—R. v. ABINGDON UNION (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 406; 39 L. J. M. C. 153; 22 L. T. 603; 18 W. R. 981; sub nom. HENLEY UNION v. ABINGDON UNION, 35 J. P. 138.

1084. Unintentional removal—Absence for one night.—The pauper resided in a parish in resp. union for fifteen years continuously, when he became unable to work, & became chargeable to resp. union. He continued to reside in the parish & to receive relief for two years & a half more, when having received notice to quit the premises which he occupied, he arranged to take a house in a parish within another union, & removed into the house with his family & slept there one night, not knowing that he was removing into another union. On the next day he was told that his residence in resp. union had been broken, & at once returned to a house in a parish within that union:—Held: his removal under the above circumstances, was such a break in his residence as to destroy his status of irremovability.—*NEWARK UNION v. (b) Prior Removal Order.

1086. Removal under order.—Pauper, having resided twenty years in parish S., went from S. in consequence of an order of removal to parish C., unappealed against. She intended to return to S. if the parish of C. would allow her to do so, & relieve her at S. She lived for a week in C. at her sister's in law, & then, by direction of the parish officers of C., returned to S., where she was relieved by C., & continued to reside till the order next mentioned. Within five years of her going to parish C. another order of removal to C. was made:—Held: Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, did not make her irremovable from S., the residence having been discontinued by her going to parish C. within the five years preceding the second order. Though her child & furniture remained throughout at the house in S., & the pauper continued her tenancy there & paid rent for the whole period.—R. v. SEEND (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. 1087. —]—(1) If an order of removal states that it was made by justices "in & for" the proper district, it need not also state the particular place where it was made within that district.

(2) It is not necessary that an order of removal, since Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), should negative that a pauper has become chargeable in consequence of sickness or accident.

(3) A pauper is not irremovable from a parish on the ground of residence, under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, if, at any time during the five years next before application for an order to remove him, he has been removed from the parish under a prior order; for such removal is a break in the residence. It makes no difference that the pauper so removed leaves behind furniture in a house rented & occupied by him at the time of his removal & retains the key of the house, & that he has always the animus revertendi, & actually returns & resumes occupation of his house after an absence of a few days.—R. v. HALIFAX (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 111; 3 New Mag. Cas. 6; 3 New Sess. Cas. 208; 17 L. J. M. C. 158; 11 L. T. O. S. 452; 12 J. P. 613; 12 Jur. 789; 116 E. R. 808.

1088. —]—Under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 48, it is not necessary that a lunatic, chargeable to a parish, should be sent to an asylum or licensed house. The justice before whom he is brought is to decide whether he is a proper person to be confined or not; & if not confined, he may be removed to his parish as an ordinary pauper. An idiot, aged thirty-three, living with his parents in parish B., became chargeable; & thereupon he & they were removed by order of justices to parish T., their place of settlement. The order was never appealed against. The father retained his house in B., in the care of two of his children, who were emancipated; & when removed, he intended to return as soon as he could. After four days, the paupers did return to the house in B., with the consent of the overseers of T., who promised to send weekly relief to the parents for the son; but the son again became chargeable to B.; & another order was made, finding the son & parents chargeable, & ordering their removal to T. The family had resided in B. for five years next before the making of this order, excepting only the four days above mentioned:—Held: the five years' residence was broken by the removal to parish T., & the paupers were not irremovable from B. under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—R. v. BARNSELY (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 193; 3 New Mag. Cas. 148; 3 New Sess. Cas. 542; 18 L. J. M. C. 170; 13 L. T. O. S. 160; 13 J. P. Jo. 329; 116 E. R. 840; *sub nom. R. v. 1089. —]—Paupers, who had resided in parish S. ever since 1835, were removed in 1845, under an order of justices, unappealed against, to parish C. They were delivered to the overseer of C. at his house in C., remained there a few hours, & then returned to S. the same day, & slept there the same night; an agreement having been made between the officers of the two parishes, that the paupers should continue to reside at S., & be relieved at the cost of C. They continued to reside at S. under this arrangement up to the passing of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66); after which an order of justices was made for their removal from S. to C.:—Held: the paupers were not irremovable by reason of a five years' unbroken residence in S.—R. v. CALDECOTE (INHABITANTS) (1851), 17 Q. B. 52; 4 New Sess. Cas. 687; 20 L. J. M. C. 187; 17 L. T. O. S. 93; 15 J. P. 517; 15 Jur. 537; 117 E. R. 1201.

1090. Removal of lunatic to asylum.]—A pauper lunatic may be sent to an asylum by order of a justice, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 48, though he has resided, for five years next before the application for such order, in a parish different from that in which the asylum is situate, the case of such removal being an exception to the general enactment of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1. Justices may afterwards make orders under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, ss. 58, 62, adjudging such pauper to be settled in a parish other than that in which he has so resided, and requiring such other parish to pay for maintenance, etc. Qu.: whether, if such pauper recovered, & returned to the parish whence he was taken, the order under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, s. 58, or the actual removal, would be deemed to cause a break of residence in such parish, disentitling him to the benefit of the five years formerly completed there.—R. v. LEADEN ROTHING (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 181; 3 New Sess. Cas. 525; 18 L. J. M. C. 187; 13 L. T. O. S. 137; 13 J. P. 794; 13 Jur. 534; 116 E. R. 835.

1091. Order not carried out.]—On Aug. 11, 1855, an order was made for the removal of a pauper from the parish of L. to the parish of H. At this time the pauper had resided more than three, but less than five years, in L. The pauper was not actually removed, but continued to reside in the parish of L. at the request of the parish from H. from whom she received relief up to June, 1862. By Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, three years is, after Mar. 25, 1862, to be substituted for five years, in Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, so as to render all persons irremovable from any parish where they have resided for three years next before the application for the warrant:—Held: the pauper was irremovable from the parish of L., & an order made on Aug. 18, 1862, for her removal to H. must be quashed.—R. v. HENDON (INHABITANTS) (1863), 2 New Rep. 114; 32 L. J. M. C. 202; 8 L. T. 276; 27 J. P. 677; 9 Jur. N. S. 1197; 11 W. R. 639.

(c) Temporary Absence.

1092. Where animus revertendi—General rule—No break.]—Whether a pauper had the animus revertendi is a question of fact; & the sessions ought to determine it.

In 1841, pauper, who had resided five years with his wife & family in parish St. M., in rooms hired by the quarter, went to T., the parish of his settlement, to obtain work or relief, & was there employed & paid by one of the overseers for about six weeks, during which time he lodged in the poor-house. He then returned to his wife & family, who, during his absence, continued to reside in the same rooms, & were maintained by him; & he resided there with them up to Dec. 1846, when an order for his removal from St. M. to T. was applied for. For the four years next before the passing of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), he received relief from the parish of his settlement:—Held: the pauper's absence from St. M. was no break in his residence, as there was clear evidence of his animus revertendi: & he had become irremovable within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—R. v. TACOLNESTONE (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 157; 3 New Sess. Cas. 353; 3 New Mag. Cas. 78; 18 L. J. M. C. 44; 12 L. T. O. S. 372; 13 J. P. 268; 13 Jur. 80; 116 E. R. 825.

1093. ————J.—(1) A married pauper & her children were removed by an order of justices from the parish where she had resided, as a married woman, for ten years continuously. Two years before the order of removal, her husband had left her & gone to America. She had received letters from him since his departure, & was daily expecting, at the time of the hearing of the appeal, to receive a letter from him containing money to enable her & her children to join him. The sessions having quashed the order, & stated the above facts in a case for this ct.:—Held: there was a disruption of the husband's residence, & such disruption rendered the wife & children removable, notwithstanding their unbroken personal residence in resp. parish.

(2) When the husband is absent, so as to cause a prima facie disruption of the residence, the onus is upon those who dispute that fact to show an animus revertendi (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—*R. v. 1094. ————J.—F. was resident in the parish of S. with his wife & family, in a house rented by himself. He was then hired; & the terms of his hiring required him to dwell in the parish of C. He went to C., & slept there every night whilst his hiring continued, which was for four years & four months: but he left his wife & family residing in the house in S., for which he continued to pay the rent. He was then discharged from his hiring, & returned to his house in S., where he continued to reside till removed to a third parish by an order made within five years of his return to S. His wife & family had never quitted the house in S. On appeal against the order, the sessions decided that he had resided in S. for five years next preceding the order, but subject to a case, in which the above facts were stated: & the sessions found that, whilst he dwelt at C., he intended to return to S. whenever he should leave his situation, but did not wish to leave it, & did not do so willingly:—Held: the question, whether on those facts F. resided in S. whilst dwelling at C., was not concluded by the finding of the sessions; & his absence at C., under a hiring which made it his duty not to return to S., though he intended ultimately to return to S., was not a mere temporary absence consistent with residence in S., but a permanent residence in C.; & consequently, Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, did not prevent his removal from S..—*R. v. 1095. ————J.—A pauper resided with his wife & children in resp. parish for about seven years prior to May, 1859, when he went to Cuba, in pursuance of an agreement which he had entered into with a mining co. to work for them there for three years: it being part of the agreement that during his absence the co. should pay his wife & children £5 per month out of his salary. It was always his intention to return to England to his wife & children at the end of the three years. In Nov. 1861, he returned to England in consequence of illness, & found his wife & children in the same house in which he had left them, & in which they had resided continuously in the interval:—Held: his absence in Cuba constituted a break of residence, which rendered him removable.—*WELLINGTON OVERSEERS v. At the time she left she intended to return to her mother's house if she received notice to leave within the month; her mistress gave her notice, & she returned to her mother's house in G. at the end of the month, where she remained till Feb. 1864:—Held: she had not become irremovable from G., as her absence for a month was a break of residence, her intention to return being immaterial as she had no residence of her own to return to.—*R. v. 1098. ————J.—The pauper, a journeyman tailor, having resided in the parish of B. for forty-five years, was admitted into the workhouse, & worked there at his trade under the superintendence of the master tailor. R., a tailor, residing in the neighbouring parish of S., being in want of a hand, the master tailor told the pauper that he might go to R.; & if R. & he did not agree, he might come back. If they had agreed, the pauper might have continued working for R., & R. told the pauper that he might stay as long as he thought proper:—Held: the pauper had not become irremovable from B., as his absence for ten weeks, under the circumstances, was a break of residence.—*R. v. 1099. ——— Temporary employment as nurse.]—Pauper rented a lodging in parish B., furnished by herself, & resided there for five years next before the order of removal after-mentioned, exclusive of an absence under the following circumstances. During the five years, she contracted to attend a lady for her confinement, as monthly nurse, & attended her accordingly for six weeks in the parish of E. She retained her lodging in B. throughout, paying the rent, keeping her furniture there, & always intending to return to it. At the end of the six weeks she did so return. An order having been afterwards made for removing her from B. to her place of settlement, & appealed against:—Held: there had been no disruption of the residence in B., within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—R. v. 1102. ——— No residence to which legal right to return.]—To render the absence of a party from his parish not a break of residence, it is essential that he should have a residence in such parish to which he has a right to return.

A. left his parish, where he had a lodging, which he gave up to seek elsewhere for work, intending to return when work was better, & the occupier of the house would have permitted him to have the same lodgings again on his return, & they were not, in fact, occupied in his absence:—Held: a break of residence.—R. v. 1104. ———.]—In June, 1868, a pauper sold off some of her furniture, & removed the rest to a spare room in the house of her brother-in-law, with whom she stayed off & on until Jan. 1869. She then went away, & stayed with other relations & at an infirmary in other unions until after Sept. of that year, when she returned to the house of her brother-in-law as before. In May, 1870, she took a cottage in the same union as that of the house in which she was staying, & put her furniture into it. In the following month she became chargeable to the union. Quarter sessions found that the pauper had no legal right to return to the house of her brother-in-law after her departure in Jan. 1869; & therefore held that she had not acquired a status of irremovability in that union. The ct. sent the case back, in order that the justices might find as a fact whether or not her brother in law intended, when she went away, to receive her again as before; & intimated that their judgment would depend upon that fact.—KNARESBOROUGH UNION v. PATELEY BRIDGE UNION (1871), 25 L. T. 590.

1105. ——— Domestic servant—Absence on holiday.]—The pauper, an old woman of seventy, had lived twenty-eight years in the parish from which she was ordered to be removed; during the last four years she was at intervals in the workhouse, & had no other place of residence. Upon leaving the workhouse in 1870, she was for six weeks in domestic service in the parish; after which, finding herself too old for such service she left, saying that she wished at any rate first to have a holiday. She stayed six days out of the parish with a son & a friend, both of whom were too poor to continue to entertain her. She then returned to the workhouse of the parish, from which she was afterwards removed to her place of legal settlement:—Held: this was not such a breach of residence as to destroy the pauper's status of irremovability in the removing parish, although she had no place of residence in that parish to which she could return, during her absence.—R. v. ST. IVES (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 467; 41 L. J. M. C. 94; 26 L. T. 393; 36 J. P. 645; 20 W. R. 657.

1106. ——— Becoming lunatic.]—The pauper, lunatic, who had been deserted by her parents, was sent by the Great Yarmouth Union to a home for feeble minded girls at Ipswich. She afterwards went into service at Weeley in applt. union & required a status of irremovability in that union. Her malady becoming more pronounced, she desired to return to the home. Her mistress had determined to get rid of her, but did not communicate this decision to the servant. The servant, on leaving Weeley, expressed a desire to return there to the service of her former mistress after being cured at the home. On arrival at the home, she became incurably insane & incapable of exercising any choice as to her residence:—Held: there was such a break of residence as to destroy her status of irremovability in the Tendingr Union.—J. TENDRING UNION v. IPSWICH UNION (1903), 67 J. P. 304; 1 L. G. R. 574, D. C.

1109. ———.]—After a husband & wife had, by residence in a union, acquired irremovability under the Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, as amended by later Acts, the husband went to reside elsewhere, & the irremovability was lost. He died. The widow shortly afterwards became chargeable to the union in which they had resided. An order was thereafter made for her removal:—Held: (1) by reason of the break of her husband's residence, her residence during his life was not residence within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), & consequently, her residence as widow not having alone sufficed to render her irremovable, she was removable; (2) burden of proof that the husband had an animus revertendi was on applts.—R. v. MANCHESTER OVERSEERS (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 50;

1110. Absence on duty—Nurse sent to branch hospital.]—A pauper, by virtue of her employment as a nurse by the trustees of the Manchester Royal Infirmary, resided for five years, with the exception of two periods of absence of three & five months' duration respectively, when she was sent to a branch establishment, in applt. township. By the terms of her engagement as nurse she was required to undertake whatever duties she was ordered, whether as a hospital or a private nurse. On the occasions of her absence at the branch establishment, which, though a separate building in a different parish, was entirely under the management of the Royal Infirmary, the pauper left behind her at the Royal Infirmary the greater part of her property & effects, & she went there from time to time for her wages & for change of clothing as she required it:—Held: the two periods of absence of the pauper did not constitute a break of residence, & she had gained a legal settlement in applt. township by three years' residence within Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—MANCHESTER OVERSEERS v. ORMSKIRK UNION (1886), 16 Q. B. D. 723; 54 L. T. 573; 50 J. P. 518; 34 W. R. 533; 2 T. L. R. 475, D. C.

1111. Absence abroad—In search of work.]—B., father of paupers, had resided more than three years in S. parish, & then left his wife & children at S. for the Cape of Good Hope, in search of work. He sent his family £1 a week all the time he was abroad, & returned after a year to S., where the family still lived, but he deserted them, & the children being under sixteen were sought to be removed on the ground that B.'s settlement in S. was lost by breach of residence:—Held: the justices were right in holding that the absence for a year was a break of B.'s residence in S.—TOTNES UNION v. CARDIFF UNION (1880), 51 J. P. 133; 2 T. L. R. 370, D. C.; affd., 3 T. L. R. 45, C. A.

1112. Temporary absence of lunatic on trial.]—A person who had acquired exemption from removal by residence in a certain union became insane, & was sent to a pauper lunatic asylum. Some months afterwards she was released on trial, & resided for about seven weeks with her relations in another union, when she got worse, & was again received into the asylum. At the time of her release her mental capacity was such that she was incapable of exercising any independent choice as to her residence. A magistrate's order was obtained ex parte under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), ss. 287, 294, directing payment by the union in which the lunatic had acquired exemption from removal of the expenses of her removal to the asylum, & her maintenance there after she had been received into the asylum the second time. On a rule for a certiorari to quash the order:—Held: the temporary absence of the lunatic from the union where she had acquired exemption from removal, when she was incapable of exercising any choice as to her residence, did not constitute such a break of residence as to put an end to her status of irremovability.—R. v. BRUCE & BRAMLEY UNION, [1892] 2 Q. B. 136; 67 L. T. 314; 50 J. P. 567; 40 W. R. 680; 36 Sol. Jo. 542, D. C.

1113. Absence with intention to break residence.]

—A pauper whose original settlement was in the C. union had by residence become irremovable in the E. union, & was sent to the E. workhouse. She desired to be sent to the C. workhouse, in which her son was, & she therefore obtained her discharge from the E. workhouse & went to reside for a week with a relative in another union in order to break her status of irremovability in the E. union. She then returned to the E. workhouse for the purpose of being sent to the C. union:—Held: an order for her removal from the E. union to the C. union was rightly made.—CAMBRIDGE UNION v. C. What Time must be Excluded.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 108 (2) (f), (g).

1114. General rule—Period excluded.]—(1) Under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, a pauper cannot be removed under an order of justices, if he has resided in the parish five years next before the application for a warrant of removal, whether such residence or any part of it was after or before the passing of the Act.

(2) Assuming the first proviso in Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, which excludes from the computation of the five years any time during which the party shall have been in prison or receiving parochial relief, etc., to be retrospective, a residence down to the time of the application makes the party irremovable, though he may have received parochial relief within five years of the application, provided the residence amounted in the whole to five years exclusive of the period of such relief.—R. v. HARROW ON THE HILL (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 103; 3 New Sess. Cas. 232; 3 New Mag. Cas. 9; 17 L. J. M. C. 148; 11 L. T. O. S. 290; 12 J. P. 584; 12 Jur. 518; 116 E. R. 805.

1115. ———.]—(1) By Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, a pauper, in order to acquire the privilege of irremovability, must be resident in the parish for five years previous to the making of the order of removal.

(2) If the pauper has been imprisoned or relieved, etc., for a period in the parish, that period is to be excluded in the computation of the required time.

(3) If, however, the period of imprisonment, etc., was passed out of the parish the pauper is removable; for, in such a case, as the enacting clause of the sect. does not apply, so neither does the excepting clause.

(4) Semble: the removal after the statute of a person rendered irremovable thereby is a good ground of appeal against a valid order of removal made before the statute.—R. v. 1116. ———.]—The receipt of relief in the course of the five years preceding the application for the order, does not affect the continuity of residence, so as to prevent the person from becoming irremovable by virtue of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), if after excluding the period or periods during which relief has been received, there remains a five years' residence.—R. v. CROYDON (1848), 3 New Mag. Cas. 60; 12 L. T. O. S. 147.

1117. ———.]—The husband of the pauper had resided in resp. union continuously for upwards of three years. During part of this time the pauper was in lunatic asylums, where she was maintained as a pauper lunatic, but in lucid intervals, the aggregate of which amounted to more than a year, she lived with her husband in resp. union. The husband did not during his residence receive parish relief otherwise than in respect of the maintenance of his wife as a pauper lunatic:—Held: the husband was irremovable, for the periods during which he did not receive parish relief could be put together in order to constitute a year's residence by him under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & Union Chargeability Act, 1805 (c. 70), s. 8, & the pauper took her husband's status of irremovability.—*IPSWICH UNION v. 1120. ———.]—A woman & her husband resided in the W. H. union from Sept. 12, 1894, to Feb. 1901, & acquired a settlement in such union, & two children were born there during such residence. In Feb. 1901, the family went to reside in the P. union, & remained there till June, 1902, when the woman's husband died. The woman continued to reside in the P. union till June 8, 1904. She had, previously to the death of her husband, acquired a status of irremovability from such union. On the last-mentioned date the woman left the P. union for the purpose of looking for employment, & went with a third child to reside in the W. H. union. During her residence in the P. union the woman had been since the death of her husband constantly in receipt of outdoor relief, & her other two children had been taken into the parochial schools & boarded & educated at the expense of the guardians, where they remained up to the date of an order of removal which was obtained as to these two children when the mother ceased to live in the P. union as aforesaid:—Held: by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 56, the woman, owing to the relief given to her children, must be deemed to have been herself in receipt of relief from the P. union, & could not break her residence in the P. union, & must be deemed to be irremovable from that union, & the order of removal was, therefore, wrongly made.—*WEST HAM UNION v. 1121. ——— Maintenance of lunatic wife.—In 1835, the pauper's father & mother went to reside at E., & they both continued to reside there till July, 1847. The pauper was born there in Jan. 1844. In July, 1847, the mother became chargeable to E., as a lunatic, & was removed to an asylum at B. In Sept. 1849, an order was made by justices, adjudging the mother's settlement to be in S. After remaining in the asylum, at the charge of S., for several years, she was removed to the workhouse in S., & was maintained there by S., as a lunatic, till her death in Oct. 1858. The pauper continued to reside with her father, in E., from her birth till his death, in Dec. 1857; & after his death, she remained there till Feb. 1858, when she became chargeable to E. In Dec. 1858, an order was made for her removal to S., which was quashed, on appeal, by an order of sessions:—Held: the pauper was, by Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), irremovable from E.; for that the relief afforded to her father by the maintenance of her mother did not deprive him of the status of irremovability from E. which he had previously acquired; that status was communicated to the pauper, & she retained it at the date of the order of removal.—*R. v. The Nazareth Houses are established in various parts of England for the relief of the poor & afflicted persons, & for the education & training for service of orphan Roman Catholic children, imbeciles & epileptics, & persons requiring skilled nursing, or constant medical attendance, are not admitted. There are no trained nurses, nor is there a resident medical attendant. The house has an endowment fund, which depends greatly on voluntary subscriptions. The woman, being of weak intellect & quarrelsome nature, never obtained a situation outside the house. She was a voluntary & ordinary inmate doing domestic duties & receiving no special medical attention:—Held: she was not confined as a patient in a hospital within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & was irremovable from the Lancaster Union.—*ORMSKIRK UNION v. — Home for incurables.] —St. Michael's Home, Clacton, was a home for crippled girls suffering from tubercular disease of the spine or joints, but not for those suffering from tuberculosis of lungs & therefore requiring medical treatment, & who, having been treated in hospital, had been discharged therefrom as incurable. No special medical treatment was provided, but only medical treatment for usual children's ailments. There was no limit to the time during which the girls might remain as inmates, & most of them stayed a number of years, or until some circumstance arose which necessitated their going elsewhere.

M., then a girl aged sixteen, was admitted as an inmate of the Home in 1911, suffering from tubercular disease of the spine, having been discharged from a hospital as incurable. She remained until 1918, when the Board of Education took over the home & limited the age of the inmates to sixteen years. She afterwards became chargeable to resps.' union, & upon their application, on evidence of the above facts, a Metropolitan police magistrate made an order adjudging her last settlement to be in the parish of Clacton in appls.' union. By consent of the parties a case was stated under Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (c. 45), s. 11, for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: during her stay at the home, M. was not a "patient confined in a hospital," & had therefore acquired a legal settlement there within the Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—*TENDRING UNION v. In Apr. 1912, he went to reside in a parish in the L. union where he lived till Sept. 7, 1914, thereby becoming irremovable from that parish. On Sept. 7, 1914, he enlisted in the Army & served as a soldier until Aug. 25, 1918, when he was killed. On Nov. 22, 1914, he married. His wife, after her marriage, went back to live with her parents in a parish in the W. Union, where she continued to reside till she became insane. 1141. General rule.]—(1) Under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, imprisonment in England under a sentence of penal servitude is not an interruption of the residence necessary to confer irremovability. An order for the removal of the wife & children of T. was obtained on Nov. 6, 1857. Previously to 1849, T. had gained a settlement in applt.'s parish. In 1849 T. & his family went to reside in resps.' parish. In 1851 he was convicted & sent to prison out of the parish for three months & then returned. In June, 1854, he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, & on that occasion was absent from the parish two years, & one month, when he again returned to resps.' parish. On Oct. 24, 1856, he was again apprehended, & on Jan. 8, 1857, sentenced to six years' penal servitude, Between Lady-day, 1849 & Oct. 24, 1856, when out of prison, he resided in resps.' parish, & his wife & family resided there up to the time of the granting of the order of removal. The wife had seen T. in Millbank prison about the time of the granting the order. T. had further a settlement by estate between 1849 & Oct. 1856, in resps.' parish:—Held: he was a prisoner in prison within the meaning of the proviso, & the wife & family were therefore not removable.

(2) Where a man having resided with his wife & children for more than five years in a parish, is sentenced to six years' penal servitude, the wife & children, continuing to reside in the same parish, are irremovable whilst he remains in prison in England in consequence of the sentence.—R. v. POTTERHANWORTH (INHABITANTS) (1858), 1 E. & E. 262; 28 L. J. M. C. 56; 32 L. T. O. S. 158; 23 J. P. 564; 4 Jur. N. S. 1277; 7 W. R. 106; 120 E. R. 907.

1142. ———.—IPSWICH UNION v. WEST HAM UNION, No. 1117, ante.

1143. ———.—(1) Notwithstanding Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 a child over sixteen, who is residing with its parent as part of the family, & who has no other settlement than the settlement derived from the parent at the time when it attained sixteen, is not removable to its place of settlement if the parent is not removable. A child, after living in applt. union with its father, who had acquired a settlement by residence there, removed with him into resp. union, & while residing there with him as part of his family attained the age of sixteen & became chargeable. An order was made for the removal of the child to applt. union. At the date of this order the father had resided for more than a year in resp. union, & had thereby become irremovable:—Held: notwithstanding Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, Poor Removal Act, 1848 (c. 111), s. 1 applied, & the father not being removable, the child was not removable.

(2) What then is the right construction of the proviso in Poor Removal Act, 1848 (c. 111), s. 1? . . . I think that the proviso was a benevolent & humane enactment, & that its object was to prevent in these cases of misfortune the separation of families, so long as the family continued to be one family living together. If the family were living together as one under the superintendence of its head, & the misfortune of requiring parish relief should happen either to the parents or to the children, they were not to be separated from each other. Remembering the object with which the proviso was passed, I cannot doubt that it applies to the case of a person who has a wife or children living with him as part of his family. When you consider the object of the Legislature, it is a necessary implication that you should read the proviso thus: "Whenever any person shall have a wife or children living with him as part of his family," the words in italics being understood. That being so, the next point to be considered is, what is the meaning of the following words: "Having no other settlement than his or her own." In order to construe those words, we must look at the different persons to whom they are applied. Who are they? "Wife or children," & no other—wife or children still being part of the father's or mother's family. That being so, I have no hesitation in saying that the meaning of the words, "Having no other settlement than his or her own" is, "having no other settlement than the settlement derived from him or her." The proviso is to apply so long as that state of things lasts. It does not, therefore, apply when the wife or child has another settlement than that derived from the husband or father or mother, but, so long as the only settlement of the wife or the child or children is that derived from the husband or the father or the mother—that is, the wife from her husband, or the child from its father or mother—they are not to be separated (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—

1147. Consent of wife—Husband having no settlement.—(1) Assuming that a wife may be removed to her maiden settlement without her husband by consent of both, such consent is not to be inferred from examinations of the husband & wife taken at the same time before the removing justices, in which the husband states his consent, & the wife says nothing on the subject.

(2) The first examination purported, by the heading, to be taken by the justices touching the settlement of J. M., the husband: other material ones purported to be taken “at the time, place, & in manner, aforesaid”: but one of these related entirely to the wife’s maiden settlement, & the order removed her & her children, & not the husband:—Held: the examinations were not on that account objectionable, on appeal against the order.

(3) The examinations stated that the husband & a parish officer had diligently inquired in all likely places for the husband’s settlement, but had not found any, & believed he had none:—Held: the search was sufficiently stated, & the examinations were not defective for omitting to show with more certainty that the husband had not a settlement in Scotland, Ireland, the Isle of Man, etc., to which he & his family might have been removed under Poor Relief Act, 1819 (c. 12), s. 33.—*R. v. An order was then made by justices for her removal alone to another union containing her husband’s last place of settlement. The husband consented to the removal order; the wife was mentally incapable of consent:—Held: the order of removal made under these circumstances did not contravene the policy of the law with regard to the separation of husband & wife, & was good.—*R. v. Separation of husband & wife—No presumption that separation effected.—Two justices ordered F., the wife of R., a Scotsman, having no settlement in England, & a lunatic, to be removed from parish A., where she had become chargeable, to parish B., which was adjudged to be her lawful settlement. The order did not state where the husband was when it was made:—Held: the order was not void on the ground that it would effect the separation of husband & wife, because it was not to be presumed that when it was made, the husband was residing in parish A., or was not residing in parish B.—R. v. STOCKTON (INHABITANTS) (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 546; 2 Nev. & M. K. B. 353; 1 Nev. & M. M. C. 411; 3 L. J. M. C. 48; 110 E. R. 892.

It is the nature of a proviso to refer to a preceding enactment, & to take some cases out of it, which would otherwise be within it. So here the

E. from her marriage in 1840 to Oct. 1854. Her husband died in July, 1845; & she continued to reside in E., being a widow, until Oct. 1854, when an order was made to remove her from E. to her settlement. From the time of the marriage until Feb. 1848, her husband was serving the Queen as a marine. He then quitted the service, & resided with his wife at E. until the beginning of 1850, when he became a seaman on board a Queen's ship, & served there until Nov. 1853. He then returned & lived with his wife until the beginning of 1854, from which time, until his death in July, 1854, he served as a hired seaman on board a packet belonging to a private co.; & he died at sea in such service.—Held: the widow was not irremovable under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1; for that the husband, excluding the time during which he was in the Queen's service as marine & sailor, had not resided continuously for a period which, joined with the time of her residence after his death, would make up five years' continuous residence. But she was irremovable under sect. 2, the facts showing that the husband was, at the time of his death, domiciled in E., with an animus revertendi, & therefore she was in law resident with him at the time of his death, & was irremovable for the twelve months following, while she remained a widow.—*R. v. 1177. How irremovability acquired—One year's residence after desertion.]—About thirteen years ago, in consequence of a quarrel, a man separated from his wife & daughter, & took other lodgings in the same parish, where he cohabited with another woman, by whom he had children, & resided with them up to the present time. The wife, shortly after the separation, having become chargeable to the parish, the man, under threat of legal proceedings by the parish officers, paid her 2s. 6d. a week. The wife afterwards removed with the daughter, who was eighteen years old, unemancipated, & had no settlement of her own, to another parish, where the allowance by the husband was continued, & where, after residing more than a year, mother & daughter became chargeable:—Held: the conduct of the man amounted to a desertion of his wife within Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 3, & the wife was therefore irremovable; but the daughter was removable to her father's place of settlement, as the mother, by the desertion, did not become the head of the family.—*R. v. Sect. 2.—Irremovability: Sub-sect. 3, C., D. & E.]

A married woman, having contracted habits of intemperance, frequently pawned her husband's goods in order to procure drink, & on several occasions used for other purposes money given to her by him for payment of his rent, & had conducted herself in such a manner as to render it impossible for her husband to keep a respectable home for his children. He in consequence informed her that they must live apart for a time; that she might take sufficient furniture to furnish a bedroom, & he would allow her 8s. a week; & that she must endeavour to get rid of her drinking habits, & if she did so they could live together again. She accordingly left him & took a lodging for herself, & for eleven months he continued to make her the promised allowance, but then, finding that she had been guilty of adultery, he discontinued it, & she thereupon went to cohabit with another man, & her husband never again lived with her:—Held: the husband had deserted his wife within the meaning of the Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 3.—SOUTHWARK UNION v. CITY OF LONDON UNION, [1906] 2 K. B. 112; 75 L. J. K. B. 559; 94 L. T. 763; 70 J. P. 449; 54 W. R. 547; 22 T. L. R. 568; 4 L. G. R. 730, C. A.

1180. What constitutes desertion—Absence of husband on sea voyage.—The wife of a seaman, who had no settlement, became chargeable during her husband's absence on one of his ordinary voyages to Calcutta:—Held: the husband's absence, under these circumstances, was, for the purpose of the wife's removability, equivalent to desertion, & an order for her removal to her maiden settlement was good. Although he had partially provided for her maintenance during his absence, & returned to her at the end of the voyage, as he had done after previous voyages, resuming his residence with her in the removing parish.—*R. v. 1182. — — — — ——On Oct. 28, 1902, a married woman left her husband because he had contracted a venereal disease by misconduct with other women. On Nov. 17, 1902, on a complaint by her that her husband had deserted her, a ct. of summary jurisdiction granted a separation order under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39). The wife never subsequently cohabited with her husband, & she resided in the district of resp. union for more than a year previously to Oct. 6, 1908, on which date she was sent to an asylum as a pauper lunatic:—Held: the husband had deserted his wife within Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 3; the separation order did not put an end to the desertion; & the wife was, therefore, irremovable from resp. union.—EASTBOURNE UNION v. CROYDON UNION, [1910] 2 K. B. 16; 79 L. J. K. B. 646; 102 L. T. 595; 74 J. P. 286; 26 T. L. R. 447; 8 L. G. R. 503, D. C.

with whom her husband reasonably suspected her of too much intimacy, came home the worse for drink & found the door of her husband's house locked. She forced her way in; & in the morning, after some words, her husband threatened to lock her in. He then went out to his work, & when he came back he found his wife absent, & that part of his furniture & clothes had been carried away. The pauper took a room elsewhere, & shortly afterwards went away with W., with whom she lived in adultery until his death in 1879. After W.'s death, the pauper wrote to her husband, asking him to receive her back. He took no notice of her letter, & if she had gone back to him he would not have received her. In Aug. 1881, she became chargeable to the parish of Liverpool as a pauper lunatic, & an order of justices was made for her removal to her husband's parish, which order was confirmed by quarter sessions. Upon appeal against the last-mentioned order:—Held: the above facts disclosed no reasonable evidence of desertion of the wife by the husband, within Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55).—*R. v. 1187. — — — — — Though with mother's consent.—The rule, that a child within the age of nurture cannot be separated from the mother by order of removal, is established for the benefit of the child, & therefore cannot be dispensed with by the mother's consent. A woman having children by a first marriage, born in parish B., married again; her husband was unable to maintain the children; & the family became chargeable to parish A. The mother consented, & wished, that the children, then in the workhouse of A., & being within the age of nurture, should be removed to their own parish; & two justices thereupon made an order for removing them to B., which the sessions on appeal confirmed, subject to a case. This ct. quashed the orders.—R. v. BIRMINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1843), 5 Q. B. 210; 3 Gal. & Dav. 153; 13 L. J. M. C. 1; 2 L. T. O. S. 119; 7 J. P. 705; 7 Jur. 1014; 114 E. R. 1228.

1188. — — — — ——A widow whose parish of settlement was Aughton, but who was irremovable from Leeds by a five years' residence, had three children, & being unable to maintain them, the Leeds board of guardians made an order for the admission of such three children into the workhouse. A few weeks afterwards the overseers of Leeds obtained an order for the removal of these children to Aughton. The object of the board of guardians in sending them to the workhouse was their removal to their place of settlement. They were sent there with the consent of their mother, but she was not informed that the result of separating her children from her would be their removal to Aughton. Each of the children at the time of the order of removal was under seven years of age:—Held: (1) under the circumstances the separation of the children from the mother was a fraud upon her, & the order of removal was bad; (2) as the children were within the age of nurture, the mother could not consent to their separation from her.—R. v. AUGHTON (INHABITANTS) (1861), 4 L. T. 244; 25 J. P. 711.

1189. — Child not under nurture of mother.—A woman, settled in parish C., bore a bastard child there before the passing of Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), & it was placed for nurture in parish W. She then married, & lived with her husband, in parish K., the child remaining in W. The child, becoming afterwards chargeable to W. while under the age of sixteen, was removed, by order of justices, to C.:—Held: the removal was proper, & consistent with Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 57.—R. v. WENDRON (INHABITANTS) (1838), 7 Ad. & El. 819; 3 Nev. & P. K. B. 62; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 27; 7 L. J. M. C. 22.

1190. — *Three legitimate children, two above the age of seven years but below the age of sixteen years, & one under the age of seven years, were resident with their mother, a widow, in the parish of N., the settlement of mother & children being in the parish of C. The mother neglected her children, & was unable to support them. At the instance of a relative, they were taken to the workhouse of N. & there maintained by the parish of N., the mother remaining out of the workhouse in N. After the children had remained in the workhouse separate from the mother for three months, an order was obtained for their removal to C. On appeal, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case stating the above facts, & finding that the admission of the children into the workhouse was with the consent of the mother, & with the immediate object of relieving the children; & that it was in every way most beneficial to them to be removed thither; & that the ultimate object of their admission was their removal to their place of settlement:—Held: Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 3, did not apply, both because the children were not at the time of the order residing with the mother, & because she, being chargeable in respect of the relief given to the children, might herself have been lawfully removed from N. & though the child under the age of seven could not have been removed, if the effect had been to separate it from the mother so as to deprive it of the benefit of nurture, it was removable, the mother being unable to afford it nurture, & the separation having been bonâ fide brought about for the benefit of the child.—*R. v. 1191. — An Irish woman unmarried, & not having any settlement in England, applied to the relieving officer of a union for an order of admission to the workhouse, stating that she was in distress and lived in C., one of the parishes within the union, & expected her confinement that day. He declined to give her an order, but told her when she became bad to go to the workhouse & she would be admitted. In the evening of the same day, finding labour coming on, she went to the workhouse & told the master that she had applied to the relieving officer for an order without success, & that she was living in C.; she *was admitted, & delivered of a child two hours after. The master entered the name of the mother in the books as "casual," & charged her & her child to the common fund; & these entries having been laid before the guardians, the relief of the mother & child was charged to the common fund. After remaining in the workhouse a fortnight, the mother returned with her child to her former residence, & continued there for about twelve months; she then went with her child to G., & after four months was admitted into a reformatory in P. The child was not admissible into it, & becoming chargeable to G., an order for its removal to C. was made with its mother's assent, notwithstanding Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 3:—Held: the child was removable, the mother being unable to afford it nurture, & being already separated from it.—*R. v. H. union, during the period of the child's residence there:—Held: the child was, notwithstanding it was illegitimate, not irremovable by virtue of its residence in L., inasmuch as the mother would have been removable during the whole of such residence.—HAMPSTEAD UNION v. WEST HAM UNION (1909), 73 J. P. 492.

The three children had often been fed & clothed by their uncle, & he procured an order from the relieving officer of parish A. for their admission into the poorhouse, where they were taken on Nov. 1, & continued down to Feb. 13, when the order of removal to their place of settlement was obtained. The relieving officer had previously offered an order to the mother for the admission of her & the three children to the workhouse, but she refused to go for herself, but she consented to the three children going:—Held: the three children might be removed to their place of settlement without the mother being also removed.—R. v. 1209. *Unemancipated child.]—F. resided with her father & as part of his family in the parish of B. until, being then under the age of sixteen, she was, in 1847, taken into the workhouse of B., & remained there receiving relief from B. till 1852. At this time the father was settled in A.; but, having resided in B. for more than five years, was irremovable from B. In 1848, F., being still in the workhouse, attained sixteen. In 1849, F.'s father quitted the parish of B. In 1852, F. became lunatic, & was removed from the workhouse of B. to a lunatic asylum. On appeal against an order of two justices, on the guardians of the union comprising A., to pay to the guardians of the union comprising B. the expenses of the lunatic, the sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case stating the above facts:—Held: F., being unemancipated & an infant, though above sixteen, had the same status of removability as her father; & he having quitted B. in 1849, she then ceased to be irremovable under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1; & the order was confirmed.—R. v. 1214. ————.]—Lunatic.]—On Oct. 17, 1854, J., who was then eighteen years old & living, unemancipated, with his father, T., in the parish of A. in the S. union, was removed as a lunatic pauper to an asylum, where he had since continued. At that time both T. & J. had resided in A. for more than the five next preceding years. T. continued to reside there till 1857, when he left, & had not since returned. T.'s settlement, both on & since Oct. 17, 1854, was in the parish of G. J. was maintained in the asylum from that date, at the cost of the S. union, until, it being discovered that T. had left A., an order of justices was, on Oct. 11, 1859, made under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 97, adjudging J. to be settled in G., & ordering G. to pay the preceding twelve months' expenses of his maintenance, & a weekly sum for his future support. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, provides that all expenses incurred for the removal, maintenance, etc., of a pauper lunatic removed to an asylum, "who would at the time of his being conveyed to such asylum" "have been exempt from removal to the parish of his settlement" "by reason of some provision in" Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), "shall be paid by the guardians of the parish wherein such lunatic shall have acquired such exemption," "and where such parish shall be comprised in any union same shall be paid by the guardians, & be charged to the common fund of such union"; "and no order shall be made under any provision" "in this" "Act on the parish of the settlement in respect of any such lunatic pauper." On a case stated for this ct. on an appeal to sessions by G. against the order of Oct. 11, 1859:—Held: 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, applied, & the order was therefore bad; J. was, at the time of his being conveyed to the asylum, exempt from removal to G. by reason of a provision in Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), with which the amending statute Poor Removal Act, 1848 (c. 111), was to be read as one: & had himself, though not sui juris, acquired such exemption in A.—*R. v. 1215. ———.—A pauper aged thirty had always lived with her father & mother, being unable to take care of herself. The father had lived in parish M. more than five years when he died in 1856. The pauper then lived with the mother till 1858, when the pauper went into the workhouse, & while in the workhouse the mother, who had acquired no settlement in her own right, went to reside in parish C. Afterwards, in 1860, the pauper was sent from the workhouse to the county lunatic asylum:—Held: the pauper's irremovability floated with the mother's, & as, at the date of being sent to the asylum, the mother by breaking her residence was removable, so was the pauper, & the parish of the father's settlement was chargeable with the maintenance.—*R. v. ### SECT. 3.—REMOVAL ORDERS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—THE ORDER.

A. In General.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), ss. 120–132.

1216. Certainty necessary.—BLOXOM PARISH v. KINGSTON PARISH (1699), 12 Mod. Rep. 323; 88 E. R. 1352.

1217. Conditional order.—Justices of the peace cannot make a conditional order of removal.—OAKHAM PARISH v. WHITTLESEA PARISH (1709), 11 Mod. Rep. 171; 88 E. R. 969.

1218. Order in form of command.—To officers of parish to which pauper removed.—Justice cannot command the officers of the parish whither H. is sent to remove him.—ST. GEORGE'S (INHABITANTS) v. ST. OLAVE'S (INHABITANTS) (1702), 2 Salk. 493; 91 E. R. 423.

1219. ——— Without reference to twenty-one days' notice of removal.—(1) It is no objection to an order of removal, that it contains an adjudication that the pauper is settled in such a parish, without any express statement that the justices have had proof of the settlement in that parish.

(2) It is also no objection, that it directs the officers of the removing parish to convey the pauper to his last place of legal settlement, without any mention of the provision in Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, that paupers shall not be removed without twenty-one days' notice in writing to the parish to which they are sent, etc.

(3) "The churchwardens & overseers of the township of S," is a sufficient description in the heading of an order of removal, without adding that it is a place maintaining its own poor.

(4) Where an examination returned to a certiorari was headed, "The examination of M. V., of the township of S., & appeared on the face of it to be taken at S., & stated that the examinant M. V., & three children by her deceased husband, aged respectively seven years, three years, & one year, "are chargeable to S."—Held: there appeared sufficient evidence before the justices that M. V. & her children were inhabiting in S. to give them jurisdiction to remove.—R. v. ROTHERHAM (INHABITANTS) (1842), 3 Q. B. 776; 2 Q. B. 557, n.; 2 Gal. & Dav. 523; 12 L. J. M. C. 17; 6 J. 1220. Order not obligatory on parish to which sent.—An order of removal is merely a warrant to enable the officers of a parish to remove paupers, but they are not obliged to carry it into effect.—R. v. ST. PANCRAS (INHABITANTS) (1843), 3 Q. B. 347; 2 Gal. & Dav. 671; 12 L. J. M. C. 42; 7 J. P. 226; 7 Jur. 193; 114 E. R. 539.

1221. Delay in execution of order.—(1) An order of removal may be executed a year after it is signed, if the pauper's circumstances be not altered in the interval.

(2) An alteration in an order of removal by one justice in the presence of the other, before it is delivered to the parish officers, does not vitiate it.—R. v. LLANWINIO (INHABITANTS) (1701), 4 Term Rep. 473; Nolan, 19; 100 E. R. 1126.

Annotation.—As to (1) Refd. R. v. Llanllechid (1860), 2 E. & E. 530.

1223. Proof of order—Secondary evidence.—Parol evidence of an order of removal, proved to be lost, is sufficient.—R. v. METHERINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1796), 6 Term Rep. 556; 101 E. R. 700.

1224. Form of order—Whether necessary to show—Time when made.—An order of removal, dated the [ ] day of Apr. 1804, is good.—R. v. BRIMPTON (INHABITANTS) (1805), 2 Smith, K. B. 277.

1225. ——— Made by parish maintaining its poor.—R. v. ROTHERHAM (INHABITANTS), No. 1219, ante.

1226. ——— Place where made.—R. v. HALIFAX (INHABITANTS), No. 1087, ante.

1227. ——— Inhabitation of parish by pauper.—(1) An order of removal under Poor PART VI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—A. k. Non-verification of facts—On which affidavits founded.—An order of sessions for removal of a pauper, granted upon insufficient grounds, cannot be sustained by affidavits of facts omitted to be verified before the order passed.—BARNARDY v. GARDINER (1854), 2 N. S. R. (James) 306.—CAN.

Sect. 3.—Removal orders: Sub-sect. 1, A., B., C., D. & E.]

Relief Act, 1662 (c. 12), & Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), s. 1, must show upon the face of it that the paupers were inhabiting in the removing parish at the time of making the order; that is they were in the parish for the purpose of inhabiting there, as contradistinguished from the purpose of visiting or passing through it. That rule is sufficiently complied with in the ordinary form, which states that the pauper has "come to inhabit" in the parish; & it is also satisfied by a statement that the pauper "intruded & came into the parish, & is now inhabiting therein" although in the latter form the purpose of the coming is not distinctly stated. An order, therefore, in that latter form was confirmed by this ct.

(2) The insertion of the words "on sight hereof" in the mandatory part of an order of removal is unobjectionable notwithstanding Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79.

(3) An order, good, in other respects, in not vitiated by the omission of any date of place.—R. v. ST. PAUL, COVENT GARDEN (INHABITANTS) (1846), 7 Q. B. 533; 2 New Mag. Cas. 42; 2 New Sess. Cas. 508; 16 L. J. M. C. 11; 8 L. T. O. S. 274; 11 J. P. 70; 10 Jur. 1081; 115 E. R. 589.

Annotation:—As to (1) Consd. R. v. Silchester (1849), 12 L. T. O. S. 374.

1228. — Misdescription of parish.]—Paupers were removed by order of justices to a parish therein described as "the parish of Poplar, in the county of Middlesex." The real description of the parish was All Saints, Poplar, in the same county;—Held: not a material variance.—R. v. BUCKINGHAMSHIRE JJ. (1843), 3 Q. B. 800; 2 Gal. & Dav. 560; 12 L. J. M. C. 29; 7 J. P. 97; 7 Jur. 256; 114 E. R. 714.

1229. — "On sight hereof."—R. v. ST. PAUL, COVENT GARDEN (INHABITANTS)*, No. 1227, ante.

1230. Conclusiveness of order—Facts recited therein.]—An order of removal of a pauper described her as the "wife of J. C. who is now absent from her, & not residing with her in the same township":—Held: it sufficiently appeared on the face of the order that J. C. was not residing in the township in question, & the ct. could not look at affidavits as to this not being the case.—R. v. LEEDS (INHABITANTS) (1857), 5 W. R. 499.

1231. Refusal to make order—Whether mandamus granted.]—Where justices have examined a pauper as to his settlement, & have refused to make an order for his removal, this ct. will not inquire into the discretion exercised by them.

Where the overseer of parish L. applied to justices for an order for the removal of a pauper to parish B., & the justices, having examined the pauper, refused to make the order, on the ground that the pauper had gained a subsequent settlement in parish L. in 1837, by paying rates, & serving the office of overseer there, the ct. refused a mandamus, although the pauper could not, at that time, have gained a settlement in B. by those means. This ct. will not order justices to alter an examination of a pauper according to the facts, so as to make it sufficient evidence of a settlement.—R. v. ROGERS (1843), 12 L. J. M. C. 50; 7 J. P. 240.

— Production of indenture of apprentices.]—See CROWN PRACTICE, Vol. XVI., p. 316, No. 1289.

B. Necessity to Show Jurisdiction.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 121; & generally, MAGISTRATES, Vol. XXXIII., pp. 309, 310, 358, Nos. 285–293, 678–680.

1232. General rule.]—If it do not distinctly appear on an order of removal that the justices who made it had jurisdiction, it is a nullity, & not merely voidable; & the parish to which it is directed, may object to it at any distance of time though they never appeared against it, & though they have acted under it for twenty years.—*R. v. 1233. Matter showing local jurisdiction—Sufficiency of.]—Where two counties have been mentioned in the antecedent part of an order of removal, the justices making the order must state themselves to be justices of the proper county; & it is not enough to describe themselves justices of the peace in & for the said county, although the proper county were named in the margin, & were also named last before such description of the justices.—*R. v. 1234. ———.]—An order of magistrates was directed to the parish of W. in the county of Rutland, & also to the parish of M. in the county of Leicester; & the words "County of Rutland" were then written in the margin, & the magistrates were, in a subsequent part of the order, described as justices of the peace for the county aforesaid:—Held: it thereby sufficiently appeared that they were justices for the county of Rutland.—R. v. ST. MARY'S, LEICESTER (INHABITANTS) (1818), 1 B. & Ald. 327; 106 E. R. 121.

1235. ———.]—An order of sessions, confirming an order of removal, had in the margin the words "Westmorland, to wit," & proceeded: "To the overseers of the poor of the township of K. & to the overseers of the poor of the township of C. in the said county. Whereas you, the overseers of K., have made complaint unto us whose names are hereunto set & seals affixed, being two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace & quorum in & for the said county," etc. The rest of the order was in the usual form, & did not further state the county in & for which the justices acted:—Held: the jurisdiction sufficiently appeared by reference to the margin, which was part of the order for this purpose.—R. v. CASTERTON (INHABITANTS) (1844), 6 Q. B. 507; 1 Dav. & Mer. 266; 1 New Mag. Cas. 169; 1 New Sess. Cas. 449; 14 L. J. M. C. 5; 4 L. T. O. S. 172; 9 J. P. 117; 8 Jur. 1093; 115 E. R. 189.

1245. Signature—By justices separately—Voidable.—An order of removal, signed by two justices separately, & in different counties, is only voidable, not void; & the parish wishing to avoid it, must appeal to the next sessions.—R. v. STOTFOLD (INHABITANTS) (1792), 4 Term Rep. 596; Nolan, 66; 100 E. R. 1196.

1246. — Abbreviations.—An order of removal purported to be made by two justices for the jurisdiction, but did not set forth their names in full; in signing the order, one justice abbreviated his Christian name, the other denoted his Christian name by an initial only. The examination on which the order was made purported by its caption to have been taken by two justices for the jurisdiction; & the jurat was “sworn before us the said justices,” & was signed in the same manner as the order.—Held: in each case, the signatures were sufficient.—R. v. WORTHENBURY (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 555; 1 New Mag. Cas. 352; 2 New Sess. Cas. 13; 14 L. J. M. C. 144; 5 L. T. O. S. 173; 9 J. P. 607; 9 Jur. 510; 115 E. R. 598.

1247. Impressed seal.—It is not necessary that an order of justices should be sealed with wax. An impression made in ink with a wooden block, in the usual place of a seal, is sufficient, when the document purports to be given under the hands & seals of the justices, & is in fact signed & delivered by them.—R. v. ST. PAUL, COVENT GARDEN (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 232; 1 New Mag. Cas. 292; 1 New Sess. Cas. 617; 14 L. J. M. C. 109; 9 J. P. 441; 9 Jur. 442; 115 E. R. 476.

1286. Proof of chargeability.—Relief given within district.]—Examinations showed relief to the pauper's husband in a foreign parish; relief to the pauper in a foreign parish; & a former order of removal unappealed against. The first ground of appeal denied the settlement of the pauper's husband or of the pauper in applt. parish; the fifth complained that a copy of the former order of removal not appealed against had not been sent to appls. The other grounds of appeal raised specific issues as to chargeability & relief. At the trial the relief was abandoned; appls. called on resps. to prove the former order, insisting that the first ground of appeal traversed it; resps. proved that a copy had been sent, & refused to prove the former order, contending that it was not traversed by the grounds of appeal; & sessions decided that resps. were right:—Held: as resps. objected that no copy of the former order had been sent, they were precluded from taking any other specific objection to the former order under the general ground of appeal; though the poor of the city of Norwich were supported by a common fund, the chargeability of a pauper inhabiting in Norwich is, in respect of foreign parishes, to the particular parish in which he is inhabiting.—*R. v. W. (the pauper), etc., now inhabit in the said parish of M. not having gained a legal settlement, & are now actually chargeable to the said parish; we, the said justices, upon due proof made thereof, as well on the examination of the said S. W. is in the "township of B.", etc. "Given under our hands & seals Aug. 18, 1845":—Held: (1) it sufficiently appeared that the order was made by the justices in the borough of L., & consequently within the jurisdiction; (2) though the adjudication was stated to be made "upon oath, as otherwise" yet the ct. would not intend that the justices adjudicated upon any evidence which was not upon oath, & that the words "as otherwise" must be construed to mean other legal proof; (3) the order was sufficient, without a further statement of an examination into the pauper's settlement at B.—*R. v. appeal, that the application of J. was made on behalf & with the consent of the parish officers of B. generally:—Held: (1) under these circumstances the complaint was sufficient to found the order of removal; (2) as the order contained an adjudication that the settlement of the children was in E., it was not necessary to state that they had not gained a settlement for themselves.

(3) The examination of the pauper, after setting forth a settlement alleged to have been gained by him in applt. parish, by hiring & service with one S., stated that he had six children, aged respectively eighteen, sixteen, fourteen, twelve, nine & four years; & amongst other instances of relief, that on several of his wife's confinements on the birth of the children, whilst residing in resp. parish, he had been allowed medical attendance upon his wife, by & at the expense of applt. parish:—Held: the dates of such relief sufficiently appeared by the examination.

(4) Appls. in one of their grounds of appeal, objected "that the pauper never acquired a settlement in E. by hiring & service, or by any other means":—Held: under this ground of appeal, the sessions were right in admitting evidence to show that the relief given by appls. had been given under a mistaken belief that the pauper had acquired a settlement in their parish by the hiring & service with S., set forth in the examination.

BIRMINGHAM UNION* (1878), 56 J. P. 297, D. C.

1830. Period of suspension.]—By Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, if it appear to the justices that any person ordered to be removed is unable to travel through sickness, or that it would be dangerous for him to do so, they may suspend the execution of the order until they are satisfied it may be executed without danger to any person who is the subject thereof; & the charges incurred by such suspension may by the justices be directed to be paid by the parish of settlement, in case any removal shall take place, or in case of the death of such poor person before the execution of such order. By Poor (Settlement & Removal) Act, 1809 (c. 124), s. 3, where any order of removal shall be suspended on account of the dangerous sickness of any person thereby directed to be removed, the execution of such order shall also be suspended for the same period with respect to every other person named therein. On Nov. 19, 1860, an order was obtained for the removal of J. & E. his wife from St. M. to S., & on the same day the order was suspended on account of the sickness of J. & he remained incapable of being removed until he died on June 13, 1861. Shortly before J.'s death E. became unable to travel by reason of sickness, & continued sick until she died in Apr. 1867, having in Mar. 1866, become irremovable under Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (c. 79), s. 8, by reason of having resided before Nov. 1860, for one year in St. M. without receiving parish relief. An order having been obtained after the death of E. by St. M. on S. for the expenses of maintenance of E. subsequent to the death of J., under Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2 :—Held : (1) although the order of removal was suspended in consequence of the sickness of J., it continued suspended as to E., & all the expenses of her maintenance up to Mar. 1866, must be paid by S.; (2) the order for the payment of the expenses was rightly made in Apr. 1867, on the death of E., although she had become irremovable in Mar. 1866, by virtue of Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (c. 79), s. 8.—*R. v. 1831. Liability for maintenance during suspension.]—A pauper settled in O. met with an accident while resident in M., which made him chargeable, & was relieved by M. The pauper being incapable of removal in consequence of the accident, an order of removal to O. was made, & immediately suspended :—Held : under Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), s. 2, O. was liable to the expenses incurred by M. after the order.—*R. v. 1832. Recovery of expenses of maintenance—Warrant of distress—Justices cannot inquire into validity of order—Backing of warrant.]—Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, after enabling justices to suspend orders of removal of poor persons, & to order the charges thereby incurred to be defrayed by the pauper's parish, & to direct the charges to be levied by warrant of distress, enacts that if the parties against whom it is issued are out of the jurisdiction of the justice granting the warrant, it shall be indorsed by some other justice within whose jurisdiction they are. This is peremptory on the latter upon request made.—R. v. KEYNASTON (1800), 1 East, 117; 2 Bott, 697; 102 E. R. 47.

1833. — Issue of warrant.]—An order of removal was suspended; but afterwards, the pauper having died, the suspension was taken off, & an order was made for costs, under Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, upon the parish to which the removal had been made. Neither order was appealed against. After the time for appeal had expired, application was made to a magistrate for a distress warrant, the costs having been demanded & not paid. On the hearing, it was objected that, since the expiration of the time, the parish, to which the removal was ordered, had discovered that there had been a five years' residence in the removing parish, under Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66). The magistrate, on this objection, refused the distress warrant :—Held : he was bound to issue it, the objection, if valid, being one which could be taken only by appeal against the order for costs.—Re WILLIAMS (1853), 2 E. & B. 84; 118 E. 1834. — In Feb. 1853, application was made for a distress warrant, to enforce payment of a sum of money exceeding £20 ordered in Oct. 1852, to be paid for the cost of maintaining a pauper, recently dead, during the whole period of the suspension of an order for his removal, made in 1841, & forthwith & thenceforward until the death of the pauper, suspended on account of his inability from sickness, to be removed. The pauper had resided in the removing parish for five years next before the application for the warrant of removal, & it was contended that the costs of maintaining the pauper subsequent to the Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1847 (c. 110), were chargeable to the common fund of the union, & not to the parish of the settlement. The justice refused to grant the warrant :—Held : the objection should have been taken by appeal to the sessions, where the amount might have been reduced, & as there had been no appeal, the magistrate was bound to issue his distress warrant to enforce payment.—R. v. PARKINSON (1853), 21 L. T. O. S. 113; 17 J. P. 519; 1 W. R. 327.

1835. — Upon an application, under Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, for a warrant of distress to levy the charges incurred by the suspension of an order of removal, the justice cannot inquire into the merits of the order directing payment, but is bound to enforce it by issuing his warrant. This holds even where, by reason of the amount ordered to be paid not exceeding £20, there is no appeal against the order.—R. v. HIGGINSON (1862), 2 B. & S. 471; 31 L. J. M. C. 189; 8 Jur. N. 1836. — When recoverable—Pauper neither dead nor legally removed.]—In Apr. 1843, an order was made for the removal of a pauper from parish B. to parish C., & was suspended the same day; & C. was served with notice of the order of removal on Apr. 17, 1843. On Aug. 26, 1840, Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), came into operation. Pauper had resided in B. five years next before the making the order. In Sept. 1847, execution of the order was directed by another order of justices; & the pauper was removed to C. Afterwards C. appealed against the first order:—Held: (1) the appeal was too late, inasmuch as Poor Settlement & Removal Act, 1809 (c. 124), s. 2, makes the time of appealing against a suspended order run from the time of service of the order, & not from the removal; & Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, does not give any power of appeal against the removal itself; (2) the order of Sept. 1847, which, after directing the execution of the first order, ordered C. to pay to B. £100 for charges incurred by the suspension, must be quashed on appeal, since Poor Removal Act, 1795 (c. 101), s. 2, gives such expenses only in the case of the death or removal of the pauper; & here the pauper was not dead, & the removal, being illegal under Poor Removal Act, 1840 (c. 66), s. 1, was as no removal.—R. v. CHEDGRAVE (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 206; 4 New Mag. Cas. 9; 4 New Sess. Cas. 69; 19 L. J. M. C. 54; 14 L. T. O. S. 260; 14 J. P. 242; 14 Jur. 206; 116 E. R. 845.

1337. ————.]—In Apr. 1843, an order was made for removal of a pauper from parish B. to parish C., & was suspended the same day; & C. was served with notice of the order of removal within ten days. On Aug. 26, 1840, Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), came into operation. In Sept. 1847, execution of the order was directed by another order of justices; & at the same time, they ordered payment, by C. to B., of the expenses of maintenance from Apr. 1843, to Sept. 1847 & the pauper was removed to C. He had resided in B. five years next before the execution of the order. Afterwards C. appealed against both orders. The sessions confirmed both. On cases reserved for this ct., the order of removal was confirmed on the ground that the appeal was too late; but the order for payment was quashed, on the ground that the case was not within Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, the pauper not being dead, nor, in consequence of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, legally removed:—Held: nevertheless, after the decision of this ct., B. was entitled to an order on C. for the same expenses of maintenance, the settlement having now been finally adjudged to be in C., so as to bring the case within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 84.—*R. v. 1339. ————.]—Illegal removal—Order finally confirmed.]—An order was made for the removal of a pauper, but suspended on account of his sickness. During the suspension Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), came into operation, & rendered the pauper irremovable. The suspension was subsequently taken off, & the pauper removed. On appeal against the order of removal, the order was confirmed, on the ground that due notice of appeal had not been given:—Held: the removing parish were under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), ss. 84 & 101, entitled to an order on the parish to which he was removed, for the costs of maintenance incurred during the suspension of the order, although the removal was unauthorised in law, on the ground that the pauper had been finally adjudged to belong to the last named parish, & that Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), applied to suspended orders.—R. v. CHEDGRAVE OVERSEERS (1850), 4 New Mag. Cas. 163; 4 New Sess. Cas. 310; 16 L. T. O. S. 148; sub nom. Re CHEDGRAVE OVERSEERS, 20 L. J. M. C. 23; 14 Jur. 1092.

1340. ————.]—Acquisition of settlement during suspension.]—The power given to magistrates under Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, of ordering the charges incurred during the suspension of an order of removal, to be paid by the parish to which the order is made, is confined to two cases only, viz. the death or removal of the pauper; & therefore, where a pauper, during the suspension of an order of removal, became irremovable in consequence of an estate descending to him:—Held: such a case was not within the Act; & the pauper, not having been removed, no order for the payment of any charges incurred during the suspension of the original order of removal, could be made.—R. v. CHAGFORD (INHABITANTS) (1821), 4 B. & Ald. 235; 106 E. R. 923.

1341. ————.]—Order not suspended.]—An order of removal was made on Oct. 6, 1853, & a copy thereof, with notice of chargeability, was duly sent. The pauper was, at the time of the order, pregnant, & could not be removed under the order till Mar. 9, 1854, when a demand was made for the costs of her maintenance from the time of the service of the copy of the order. Upon an information, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 84, for non-payment of those costs:—Held: (1) Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1847 (c. 43), s. 35, by which nothing in the Act shall "extend to any warrant or order for the removal of any person" did not except from the operation of the Act an order made upon an information under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 84, & therefore the information must be laid within six months, in pursuance of Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1847 (c. 43), s. 11; (2) Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 84, did not apply where the removal was delayed by the illness of the pauper; & therefore, if the information had been laid within six months, the removing parish could only have recovered the costs of maintenance for twenty-one days after the service of notice of chargeability.—HILL v. THORNCROFT (1860), 3 E. & E. 257; 30 L. J. M. C. 52; 25 J. P. 262; 7 Jur. N. S. 163; 9 W. R. 96; 121 E. R. 438; sub nom. COLLUMPTON v. BRIGHTHELMSTON, Ex p. HOWSE, 3 L. T. 318.

justices & another justice, by order indorsed on the first order, directed a removal; &, by a contemporaneous order, similarly indorsed, they directed payment of expenses. The last two orders did not, either by venue in the margin or statement in the body, show that they were made in the county:—Held: they were bad for this fault; & they were quashed on certiorari.—R. v. CROWAN (INHABITANTS) (1849), 14 Q. B. 221; 4 New Mag. Cas. 13; 3 New Sess. Cas. 663; 19 L. J. M. C. 20; 14 L. T. O. S. 172; 14 J. P. 207; 13 Jur. 1099; 117 E. R. 88.

Amendment.]—An order made by two justices, described therein as “acting in & for the county of S.,” for the removal of a pauper from B., in that county, to H., also in that county, was on the same day, suspended by them, in consequence of the illness of the pauper. On his death a second order was made, by indorsement on the first, by two other justices, for the payment, by the parish officers of H., of the expenses incurred by the suspension of the first order. In this order the justices described themselves as acting “for the borough of B.” This order contained no statement, in the margin or the body, of the particular locality in which the justices were sitting. The last mentioned order having been brought up by certiorari, the ct. amended it, without costs, under Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (c. 45), s. 7, by altering the words “for the borough of B.” to “in & for the borough of B.”; holding that there were necessarily sufficient grounds in proof before the justices, sitting in their judicial capacity, of the locality in which they were sitting, to have allowed of their drawing up the order as amended.—R. v. HELLINGLEY (INHABITANTS) (1859), 1 E. & E. 749; 28 L. J. M. C. 107; 23 J. P. 628; 5 Jur. N. S. 626; 7 W. R. 413; 120 E. R. 1091.

1347. — Order for removal of husband & family.—Suspended during illness of husband.—Whether further order necessary to remove wife on death of husband.]—Where husband & wife & their children were removed by an order of justices to the place of their last settlement, & that order was suspended as to the husband, until it should be made appear that he was sufficiently recovered to be able to travel; the wife & children being removed after his death, without any subsequent order, is no reason for the sessions to quash that order on appeal, nor to quash another order for payment of the charges of such suspension.—*R. v. 1348. — Appeal.—Time for.]—(1) By Poor Removal Act, 1794 (c. 101), s. 2, the party aggrieved by an order of justices, directing payment, to the amount of above £20 of the charges & costs of the suspension of an order of removal, on account of the illness of the pauper, may appeal to the next sessions, in like manner as against an order of removal, though he omit to give notice of such his appeal within three days after the demand of such charges & costs; by which he makes himself liable to a distress for the amount.

(2) If on appeal the former order be vacated, or the amount of the charges to be paid be reduced, the surplus, if before levied by distress, must be refunded.—R. v. BRADFORD (INHABITANTS) (1807), 9 East, 97; 103 E. R. 510.

1349. Suspension by agreement between parish officers.]—There is nothing illegal in an agreement between the parish officers of two different parishes that an order obtained by one for the removal of a pauper to the other should not be executed, & that the pauper should be allowed to reside in what would otherwise be the removing parish, the officers of the parish to which he was to be removed indemnifying the ratepayers of the other parish against any charge in respect of him. Such an agreement is binding personally upon the persons who enter it as parish officers.

In declaring upon such an agreement, the consideration being “the pauper’s being allowed to reside in the parish” of which plts. were the officers, it being shown that they were such officers, & as such had obtained an order for the pauper’s removal:—Held: the consideration sufficiently appeared to move from plts.—BENNETT v. BATTEN (1850), 4 New Mag. Cas. 97; 15 L. T. O. S. 181; 14 J. P. 558.

NORFOLK JJ.* (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 484; 1 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 69; 1 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 17; 106 E. R. 1268.

1354. — — — — —.]—A removing parish may abandon their own order of removal, but applt. parish may, notwithstanding, proceed with the appeal for the purpose of obtaining their costs.

An order having been obtained for the removal of a pauper, the removing parish, after they had been served with a notice & grounds of removal.

but before the removal of the pauper, superseded their order. Applt. parish having, notwithstanding, applied to the next sessions to enter the appeal, & the sessions having refused, this ct. refused a mandamus to compel the entry, it not having been made to appear that any expenses had been incurred by applt. parish.

Semble: it makes no difference in this respect whether resps. have merely served a notice of abandonment, or have procured the order to be superseded.

Appls., under the foregoing circumstances, having entered an appeal:—Held: the sessions might proceed to quash the order & give costs, although appls. had not produced the original order, or given resps. notice to produce it; the practice of the sessions being, that "the order appealed against, or a copy thereof," is to be delivered to the clerk of the peace when the appeal is entered, & appls. having delivered a copy.—*R. v. 1356. ————]—Resps. in an appeal which had been entered & respite, served appls. with a notice that they had abandoned the order, on the ground of a defect in the examination, & that they intended to apply at the ensuing sessions to quash the order upon a special entry "quashed, not upon the merits." They also offered to pay appls. all reasonable costs up to that time incurred by them, & all costs of maintenance; & warned them that all future costs incurred by them in prosecuting & trying the appeal, would be at their peril. Appls. applied at the ensuing sessions to have the appeal heard, & the order quashed generally. The sessions quashed the order, with a special entry in the form desired by resps., & allowed appls. their costs up to the time of the notice of the abandonment, & the costs of coming to the sessions. Upon an application for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances & hear the appeal:—Held: the sessions had done right.—R. v. WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE JJ. (1843), 8 J. P. 23.

1357. ————]—Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 8, which enables parish officers to abandon an order of removal, applies equally to an appeal that has been adjourned, the appeal, in fact, being at an end from the time of the service of notice of abandonment.

Where, therefore, an appeal came on for trial, & upon an application of appls. to amend their grounds of appeal, it was adjourned to the next sessions, before which resps. served notice of abandonment, but, nevertheless, appls. went to the next sessions & got the order of removal quashed, with costs, & subsequently applied to this ct. for a rule under Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (c. 45), s. 18, to remove the said order of sessions, in order that it may be enforced:—Held: the proceedings were erroneous, & after the notice of abandonment, appls. should have proceeded under Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 8, & should not have gone to the sessions.—KILLYMAENLLWYDD v. ST. MICHAEL'S, PEMBROKE (1852), 21 L. J. M. C. 79; sub nom. Ex p. KELLY-MAENLLWYD OVERSEERS, Bail Ct. Cas. 22; sub nom. R. v. ST. MICHAEL'S, PEMBROKE, 18 L. T. O. S. 202; 16 *J. 1358. ————]—Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (c. 79), applies to costs on abandonment of order of removal. Therefore, where guardians of a union have obtained & abandoned an order of removal, the union upon whom such order was made are entitled to their costs incurred in respect of such order in the same manner as overseers of parishes were before the passing of Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (c. 79).—R. v. SHEIL (1881), 30 W. R. 134.

1359. ————]—Limitation of time.]—The W. union appealed against a removal order obtained by B. union, & in Jan. 1887, the B. union gave written notice of abandonment of removal order pursuant to Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 8. The costs were not taxed until Sept. 1888, & an information was laid to recover them in Nov. 1888:—Held: the limitation of time specified in Poor Law Payment of Debts Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1, applied, as the debt arose on the abandonment of the order, & not on the demand of costs.—WEST HAM UNION v. BATH UNION (1889), 54 J. P. 69, D. C.

1360. ————]—Effect of.—Right to second order.]—An order of removal was obtained on May 26, & served on the following day. On June 13, the parish, which had obtained the above order, having discovered that the examinations, on which it was made, were defective, obtained a fresh order of removal to the same parish on fresh examinations. This order, which was served the following day, contained notice of abandonment of the former order. The former order had not been executed by the removal of the pauper:—Held: it was no ground of appeal against the second order, that, at the time of making it, the first order had not been discharged, countermanded, or abandoned, either by notice or by supersedeas.—*R. v. On appeal, & objection taken that the examination did not show that the paupers were legitimate, & therefore did not warrant the order of removal, the sessions decided in favour of the appeal, subject to the opinion of this Ct. on the question, whether or not the objection was fatal:—Held: the legitimacy appeared sufficiently to warrant the order of removal.—R. v. 1377. 1380. —[On appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper, it was shown that the sessions had quashed a former order between the same parties, relative to the same settlement, "upon the grounds of insufficiency in the examinations of the statement of jurisdiction & chargeability," the fact being, that in the statement of the jurisdiction the use of the word "aforesaid," had left it doubtful in & for which of two parts of the county of Lincoln, previously therein mentioned, the justices taking the examination had acted:—Held: as the defective statement which was the act of the justices & not of the parties applying for the order, was matter of form & not of merits, the order of sessions quashing the first order was not conclusive between the parties.—*R. v. 1382. Each examination must show jurisdiction.]—A parish removing paupers transmitted examinations, the first of which purported to be made touching the last legal settlement of the paupers, & to be taken by justices whose jurisdiction sufficiently appeared. In the margin were the words, "County of Leicester, to wit." The next examination had the same marginal words, & purported to be taken, "touching the abovenamed settlement," & "before us the justices"; their names were subscribed, & were the same as those subscribed to the first examination; but there was no other statement showing their jurisdiction:—Held: the latter examination was bad; for each of the examinations, on which an order of removal is made, must contain in itself every statement necessary to show jurisdiction, & the want of such statement cannot be supplied by reference from one examination to another.—*R. v. #### C. Caption.

1387. Whether separate caption to each necessary.]—Where an order of removal is made on several examinations, it is not necessary that each examination should have a distinct caption, if there be one correct caption, containing the names of all the deponents, at the head of the examinations, & each examination contain a reference to such heading by the words: "The said" A., a deponent named in the general caption, "upon his oath saith."—R. v. ST. MICHAEL, COVENTRY (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 96; 3 New Sess. Cas. 260; 17 L. J. M. C. 156; 11 L. T. O. S. 329; 12 J. P. 629; 12 Jur. 789; 116 E. R. 802.

1389. —& nature of complaint.]—The caption of examinations before removing justices began: "The examination of F. O., one of the overseers of M., & of M. L., the pauper, "touching the place of settlement of M. L., "severally made & taken on oath upon the complaint of the overseers of M. before us," etc. "The said F. O., on behalf of the overseers of M., complaineth," etc., stating complaint of the inhabiting & chargeability, etc. "The said M. L., for herself, on her oath as aforesaid, saith," etc., stating facts as to settlement, etc.:—Held: the examinations did not sufficiently show jurisdiction in the justices, since it did not appear by any caption that a proper complaint had been made when M. L. was examined.—R. v. SHEFFIELD (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 93; 3 New Sess. Cas. 282; 17 L. J. M. C. 155; 11 L. T. O. S. 328; 12 J. P. 660; 12 Jur. 791; 116 E. R. 801.

1390. —[Examinations before removing justices consisted of the examination & complaint of an overseer on behalf of the parish officers, regularly drawn up, stating a coming to inhabit & chargeability; also, of the pauper's examination as to settlement, the caption of which was: "The examination of," "taken on oath," etc., "before us," etc., "justices," etc., "for the said county, touching the place of settlement," etc.; not mentioning any complaint:—Held: the caption failed to show jurisdiction, & the examination was invalid, although the order purported to be made on due proof of the complaint as well by examination of the overseer & pauper on oath as otherwise, & the objection might be taken on a ground of appeal stating only "that the said examinations & order are bad on the faces of them respectively."—R. v. WITHAM (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 88; 11 L. T. O. S. 329; 12 J. P. 773; 12 Jur. 792; 116 E. R. 799.

1392. ———.]—Where the caption of an examination only stated that it was taken upon the complaint of the overseers touching the chargeability & settlement of the pauper:—Held: insufficient.—R. v. ASHWELL (INHABITANTS) (1848), 3 New Sess. Cas. 278; 12 Jur. 791; 12 J. P. Jo. 470.

1394. ———.]—(1) A married woman had resided in a parish for more than five years; her husband, who had resided with her more than four years before the completion of the five years, had been removed to the county gaol in another parish upon a criminal charge, & continued there until convicted & sentenced to be transported:—Held: the woman becoming chargeable was removable.

(2) A ground of appeal alleged that the examinations were bad, the caption not stating them to be taken on the complaint of the overseers of resp. parish:—Held: appts. could not, under this ground, object that the complaint made by the overseers was not sufficiently stated, the caption, in fact, stating the examinations to be taken on the complaint of the overseers, etc., as to the pauper's last place of legal settlement.

(3) In the examinations upon which an order of removal was made, the relieving officer of the union stated—"The pauper is now resident in, & receiving relief from resp. parish":—Held: sufficient evidence of chargeability.—R. v. PORT SHRIGLEY (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 143; 3 New Mag. Cas. 64; 3 New Sess. Cas. 317; 18 L. J. M. C. 33; 12 L. T. O. S. 215; 13 J. P. 251; 13 Jur. 60; 116 E. R. 820.

1395. ———.]—The caption of an examination, otherwise formally correct, showed a good complaint, but did not state that it was made to the magistrates, before whom the examination was taken, within their jurisdiction:—Held: the complaint must be taken to have been made at the same time that the examination was taken, & as the latter purported to have been taken before magistrates acting in & for the place of their jurisdiction, the complaint must also be deemed to have been so made.—R. v. CHATHAM (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 180, n.; 14 L. T. O. S. 200; 13 J. P. Jo. 761; 116 E. R. 835.

1396. Examination & complaint must be at same time.]—It is not necessary either in the examination in support of an order of removal, or in the order itself, to negative that the chargeability became necessary by reason of sickness or accident.

The caption of examinations was in the following form: "The examination of A. B. taken upon oath before us, two of her Majesty's justices, etc., in & for the county of, etc., upon the complaint of the churchwardens, etc., that the pauper now is inhabiting & receiving relief, etc.":—Held: sufficient, it clearly appearing upon the face of the caption that the examination & complaint were taken at the same time.—R. v. GOOLE (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. D. 172; 3 New Mag. Cas. 158; 3 New Sess. Cas. 668; 13 L. T. O. S. 114; 13 J. P. Jo. 296; 116 E. R. 831.

1400. — — —.]—An order of removal grounded on the following examination of the pauper, a woman, "I am twenty-eight years of age; I was born illegitimate at S.; I never did any act to gain a settlement," is bad; appts. having stated, as grounds of objection, that no legal evidence of a birth settlement in S. was disclosed in the examination, such evidence being only hearsay; & that the order & examination were bad on the faces thereof.

This examination contains no legal evidence of the place of birth, the time of birth, or the fact of illegitimacy (PATTESON, J.).—R. v. RISHWORTH (INHABITANTS) (1842), 2 Q. B. 476; 1 Gal. & Dav. 597; 11 L. J. M. C. 34; 6 J. P. 73; 6 Jur. 279; 114 E. R. 187.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. West Riding Yorkshire JJ. (1842), 2 Q. B. 705.

1401. — Proof of previous removal order.]—Under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 70), s. 81, where a removal from parish A. to parish B. is founded on a previous removal from A. to B., unappealed against, the examinations ought to show that the order for such previous removal was produced & proved before the removing justices, or its absence properly accounted for. Therefore, where the sessions had confirmed an order of removal founded on such a previous removal, parol evidence only of that removal appearing by the examination to have been given before the removing justices, this ct. quashed the order of sessions.—R. v. MILDENHALL (INHABITANTS) (1842), 2 Q. B. 517; 2 Gal. & Dav. 86; 11 L. J. M. C. 107; 6 J. P. 524; 6 Jur. 535; 114 E. R. 203.

1404. Evidence of chargeability.]—On appeal against an order of removal, it is a good objection, that the copy of examination, sent to appts. under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, does not show that the pauper was chargeable.—R. v. BLACK CALLERTON (INHABITANTS) (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 679; 2 Per. & Dav. 475; 8 L. J. M. C. 65; 3 J. P. 450; 3 Jur. 533; 113 E. R. 258.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. Altemun (1841), 10 Ad. & El. 699.

1405. Emancipation of pauper.]—(1) An order of removal purported to be made by B. C., "one of the magistrates of the police cts. of the metropolis, sitting at the Clerkenwell Police Ct., within the metropolitan police district":—Held: this sufficiently showed that the Clerkenwell Police Ct. was a ct. appointed under the provisions of Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1840 (c. 81).

(2) The examinations stated that the pauper's father resided in H. up to the year 1826, when he removed to another parish; that the pauper resided with his parents in H. as part of their family, & was then under twenty one; & in 1816 the father acquired a settlement in H.:—Held: nothing appearing to the contrary, it was to be presumed that the pauper was unemancipated in 1816, & took his father's settlement.—*R. v. 1406. By whom to be signed—Where parishes united.]—Where the laws for the relief of the poor in a single parish are administered by a board of guardians under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 39, the guardians are officers of the parish, & a notice of chargeability, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, signed by three or more of them is well signed. By a local Act, several parishes were united for the purposes of the relief of the poor, & a board of guardians was constituted for the united district, with full powers for maintaining, relieving & employing the poor; repairing & enlarging work-houses; laying rates for the purposes of the Act on the ratable property in the district, distinguishing each parish; binding poor children apprentices; taking bastardy bonds; & granting parish certificates; & it was provided that no poor rate was to be laid in the several parishes or either of them, other than was directed by the Act; that no settlement appeal should be made, prosecuted or defended by any of the churchwardens or overseers of the several parishes without an order of the guardians; that the Act should not be construed to alter the laws then subsisting, respecting the removal of the poor, between any parish or place without the district & any of the parishes within the same, but such laws should continue in force, except in the case of certificates & appeals, as above; & that all costs which should accrue to any of the parishes thereby united, from the prosecution or defence of any settlement appeal, should be defrayed out of the rates to be raised by virtue of the Act. An order was obtained for the removal of a poor person from one of the united parishes to a parish out of the district; & a copy of the order & examinations & a notice of chargeability was signed & sent to the overseers of the last mentioned parish, not by the churchwardens & overseers of the removing parish, but by three guardians of the united district, both the notice & order stating that the pauper was chargeable to the removing parish:—Held: the guardians of the united district were not officers of the several parishes comprised therein, & the notice of chargeability was insufficient.—R. v. LAMBETH UNION (1845), 5 Q. B. 513; 1 New Mag. Cas. 589; 2 New Sess. Cas. 58; 14 L. J. M. C. 133; 5 L. T. O. S. 215; 9 J. P. 600; 9 Jur. 535; 114 E. R. 1343.

1408. Signature must be authorised by majority.]
 —Under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, notice of chargeability must proceed from a majority of the parish officers, or three guardians at least, of the removing parish. Qu.: whether the notice, on the face of it, must show, by the signatures of the parties or otherwise, that it does proceed from such a majority, etc.—R. v. WESTBURY (INHABITANTS) (1844), 5 Q. B. 500; 1 Dav. & Mer. 605; 1 New Sess. Cas. 33; 17 L. J. M. C. 121, n.; 2 L. T. O. S. 327; 8 J. P. 532; 114 E. R. 1338.

1409. Names of paupers—Child within age of nurture.]
Qu.: if a female pauper & her child within the age of nurture be removed by order of justices, whether such order can be enforced, if the notice of chargeability does not mention the child as chargeable, & in reciting the order made for removal of the mother, does not show that the child is therein named:—Semble: although the order named the mother only, the parish to which the removal is made must nevertheless receive the child, if within the age of nurture, & brought with the mother. An order of removal, having the marginal venue "borough of K." & commencing "upon the complaint of the churchwardens," etc., "unto us G. C. & T. F." "being two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said borough of K.," does not sufficiently show that the justices heard the complaint within the jurisdiction. The complaint should appear to have been heard by justices "in & for," etc.—R. v. STOCKTON (INHABITANTS) (1845), 7 Q. B. 520; 1 New Mag. Cas. 354; 2 New Sess. Cas. 16; 14 L. J. M. C. 128; 5 L. T. — "Person named in order hereunto annexed."] —In the caption of an examination before removing justices, it is not sufficient to state that such examination is taken on the complaint of the overseers, touching the chargeability of the paupers, without directly alleging a complaint that they were chargeable. A notice of chargeability stated that "the persons named in the order hereunto annexed" have become chargeable, etc.; not otherwise naming them. A counterpart of the order of removal, naming the paupers, was written on the other side of the same sheet of paper:—Held: insufficient.—R. v. GOMERSAL (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 70; 3 New Sess. Cas. 284; 17 L. J. M. C. 163; 11 L. T. O. S. 328; 12 J. P. 774; 116 E. R. 794.

1411. "Sent"—Delivery by post.]
 —Notices of chargeability, etc., when sent by post, are "sent" within the meaning of Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 9, on the day they are delivered. Therefore, where notice of chargeability, etc., was posted by the removing parish on Sept. 28, & received by the officers of applt. parish on Sept. 29, & application for copies of the depositions was posted by them on Oct. 19 & received on Oct. 20:—Held: the copies were applied for within twenty-one days after the notice had been sent.—*R. v. 1420. ———.]—A parish was divided into several townships, each supporting its own poor, & having separate poor rates & overseers; & there were no overseers or poor rate for the whole parish. A district of waste land in the parish, bounded by the sea & some of the townships, but not shown to be included in any of the townships, had been inclosed under an Act of Parliament & an award of comrs. founded thereon; & under that Act & award, it contributed in certain proportions to the several rates of all the townships. A pauper, who had gained a settlement in the district, was removed to the parish generally. On appeal by all the churchwardens & overseers of all the townships, describing themselves as the churchwardens & overseers of the parish:—Held: the order of removal was bad.—*R. v. Afterwards, in obedience to a mandamus, separate appointments of overseers were made for the respective townships, & each then maintained its own poor. The mother of the pauper having applied to S. for relief for the pauper & her bastard only:—Held: under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 2, the pauper was removable to Ireland, not to M.; & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), assuming that it defines the age of emancipation to be sixteen, & prevents the head of a family from becoming chargeable by relief given to a child after that age, was not applicable, inasmuch as it extends only to English & Welsh poor.—*R. v. 1427. ——— Residing apart from parents.—A female pauper, born in parish A., the legitimate daughter of Irish parents, neither of whom had gained a settlement in England, left their house while under the age of twenty-one, & resided three years, unmarried, in parish B., with a man, by whom she had a child. While so residing, she visited her parents several times, for a fortnight or three weeks at a time. After the death of the man with whom she had been residing, she & her illegitimate child, still residing in parish B., were relieved by that parish. While she was still under twenty-one, parish B. obtained an order to remove her child from B. to A. From the time when the pauper left her parents till the making of the order, they resided, not in A. or B., but in a third parish in England:—Held: the pauper & her parents were not removable to Ireland under Poor Removal Act, 1845 (c. 117), s. 2, & the order of removal to A. was rightly made.—*R. v. 1430. ——— No settlement in England—No removal without husband as head of family.—Application was made to justices for the removal of a married woman & her two children from the parish of L., where they had become chargeable, to her birthplace in Ireland. The husband was also Irish, & neither of them had acquired any settlement in England; the children were the issue of the marriage, were unemancipated, & were also born in Ireland. The wife & children had been deserted by the husband; & it was not known where he was living:—Held: the wife & children could not be removed to Ireland under Poor Removal Act, 1845 (c. 117), s. 2, without the husband, who was the head of the family.—*POOR LAW COMRS. Therefore an appeal cannot succeed where a pauper has been ordered to be removed to L. in Ireland, if the pauper was in fact liable to be removed to Ireland but to a different union.—*LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD OF IRELAND v. By a local Act, the vestry of a parish were empowered to appoint twenty householders, who, together with the rector, churchwardens, & overseers for the time being were to be the governors & directors of the poor of the parish, & to have the sole care & management of the poor, with power to bind parish apprentices, to take bastardy bonds, to superintend & repair workhouses, etc. An order of removal was addressed to the churchwardens & overseers of this parish, & a notice of appeal against the order was given, signed by three of the governors & directors:—Held: (1) the governors & directors were the parties aggrieved, & therefore the proper persons to appeal; (2) the signature of the notice by three of the guardians was sufficient within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), ss. 81, 109.—*R. v. That parish had no notice of the order till Aug. 12, 1826, when it was served. Another order, dated Jan. 24, 1831, directed that the order of removal should be executed, & £80 paid to the removing parish by parish A., & this order was served on, & the pauper removed to, parish A. on Feb. 16, 1831. A. appealed to the then next sessions, & the sessions found that the original order of removal was not served within a reasonable time:—Held: it was not, therefore, void, but voidable only by appeal, & parish A. ought to have appealed to the next practicable sessions after it had notice of the original order.—*R. v. 1465. —.]—An order of removal made on Sept. 8, 1856, was duly served on Sept. 10. On Sept. 21, a letter, dated Sept. 20, was received by resps. from the clerk of applts., stating certain facts as to the paupers, & adding, "I shall on these grounds appeal against your order." On Sept. 29, copies of depositions were applied for, & received on Sept. 30. Notice of intention "to commence an appeal at the next general quarter sessions" was duly received on Oct. 8. At the next quarter sessions, held on Oct. 16, the appeal was not entered or respited; & resps. applied for costs, which were, however, refused. On Oct. 20, the paupers were removed. On Dec. 23, another notice of appeal, & grounds of appeal, were served. At the next sessions, held Jan. 8, 1857, both parties appeared; but, after argument, the justices refused to hear the appeal:—Held: (1) the justices acted rightly, & applts. ought to have entered & respited the appeal, even though they could not have tried it, at the Oct. sessions; (2) in judging of the "practicability" of the next sessions, the time of service of the order of removal was the proper time to reckon from.—*R. v. 1466. —Question for justices to decide on facts.]—It is for the justices at quarter sessions to decide on the facts, in the first instance, whether an appeal against an order of removal has or has not been brought at the next practicable sessions after notice of the order has been received by applts.; & mere proof that there has been some delay on the part of applts. in taking steps to avoid the order does not preclude the justices from exercising their discretion in the matter, nor compel them to dismiss the appeal.—*R. v. 1467. —Party treating appeal as to particular sessions.]—On Feb. 26, 1908, an order of removal of a pauper & her child from the Wayland Union to the Forehoe Union was made. Both unions are in the county of Norfolk. On Mar. 31, 1908, the Forehoe Union gave notice of appeal against the order. The notice did not mention any sessions as those to which it was intended to appeal.

On Apr. 8, a ct. of quarter sessions for the county of Norfolk was held, but no appeal against the order of removal was entered for those sessions. The succeeding quarter sessions were held on July 1, 1908, & the appeal against the order was entered for those sessions. The parties treated the notice of appeal as being given for those sessions:—Held: (1) the sessions of July 1, 1908, had jurisdiction to hear the appeal & to decide whether it had been entered at the next practicable sessions so as to comply with the requirements of Poor Relief Act, 1662 (c. 12), s. 2; (2) as the parties treated the notice of appeal as having been given for the sessions of July 1, 1908, the objection could not be taken that it applied only to the sessions of Apr. 8.—*R. v. 1468. — Sufficient time for entry at next sessions.—Necessity to enter appeal.—Parties appealing against an order of removal are entitled to take the full number of days given by Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 9. If at the expiration of those days there is time to give effectual notice of trial for the next sessions, it should be done; if there is not time for such notice of trial, the appeal, if it be practicable, ought to be entered & respited at the next sessions; & it is too late to enter it at a subsequent sessions.—*R. v. By the rules of practice at the sessions, ten clear days' notice of trial was required to be given by appts. No notice of trial, nor grounds of appeal, were served before the next quarter sessions, which were held on Oct. 18, 1858. At these sessions appts. entered & respited their appeal. On Dec. 18, 1858, appts. served a notice of trial of the appeal at the quarter sessions held on Jan. 4, 1859, accompanied with a statement of the grounds of appeal. The appeal was heard at the Jan. sessions, & the order of removal was quashed:—Held: the sessions had jurisdiction to adjourn the hearing of the appeal from the Oct. to the Jan. sessions: but as appts. had had time to bring on the trial of the appeal at the Oct. sessions, the better course would have been to refuse an adjournment.—*R. v. 1477. Contents of notice—Names of removing justices.]—Notice of appeal against an order of removal described the order by its contents, but did not state the names of the removing justices. On the trial of the appeal this was argued as a preliminary objection; & the sessions, without further hearing, confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this ct. on a case, which submitted, as the point for decision, whether the notice was defective for the reason above mentioned; directing that, if this ct. held the notice good, the case should be sent back to the sessions, to be heard on the merits. This ct. overruled the objection without argument, & allowed the case to go back to the sessions.—R. v. WESTHOUGHTON (INHABITANTS) (1843), 5 Q. B. 300; Dav. & Mer. 388; 13 L. J. M. C. 41; 2 L. T. 1478. ——— Error in one name.]—An order of removal, signed by two justices, B. C. & E. L. K., was, in the notice of appeal against it, described as an order made by R. H. C., & E. K. K., Esqrs. The notice being, in other respects, sufficiently distinct, & it clearly appearing that no one had been misled by the mistake, though it was shown there were within the county two justices, Sir R. H. C., Bart., & B. C., Esq.:—Held: the variance was immaterial; & the justices were bound to hear the appeal.—R. v. DENBIGHSHIRE JJ. (1841),

1480. ——— Venue of appeal—Error in description.]—Notice of appeal against an order of removal was served in due time, but erroneously described the appeal to be to the county instead of the borough sessions; this was afterwards amended, but too late for the ensuing sessions. Application having been made to the deputy recorder to enter & respite, he allowed it, on condition that the whole question should be brought before, & decided by, the recorder. At the next sessions the recorder held that the notice was bad, & dismissed the appeal. Under the above circumstances, the ct. refused to grant a mandamus to the recorder to hear the appeal, as there had been a conditional exercise of discretion, which had been accepted by applt.—R. v. BERWICK RECORDER (1863), 7 L. T. 670; 27 J. P. 87; 11 W. R. 265.

1481. Service of notice—Notice informally conveyed—In letter to overseers.]—On Oct. 26, an order for the removal of a pauper from A. to C. was served on the overseers of C. On Nov. 6, a letter was written to the overseers of A. by the assistant overseer of C. applying for a copy of the depositions of the grounds of removal, adding, "as it is intended to appeal against such order of removal." No notice was taken of this letter. On Dec. 11, a formal notice of appeal was given by the overseers of C. to the overseers of A. On Dec. 20, application was made by the overseers of C. to the clerk to the justices for a copy of the depositions, which was received on the next day, & notice was given to the overseers of A. that the appeal would be entered & respited at the next sessions, which was accordingly done:—Held: quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to enter & respite the appeal; inasmuch as, (a) the application for a copy of the depositions being made to the overseers of the removing parish, & not to the clerk to the justices, was not sufficient within Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 3; (b) the letter of Nov. 6 was not a notice of appeal.—*R. v. 1482. ——— Delivery after statutory period—Waiver of irregularity.]—Notice of appeal to sessions to be held on July 8, 1851, against an order for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper, served June 7, 1851, was delivered on June 30, 1851, too late by law, to resps., who, on July 4, 1851, served on applt. a notice to produce documents at the trial. The sessions held that the service of the notice was a step in the cause & a waiver of the irregularity in the notice of appeal :—Held : the question was one of fact & practice for the sessions if they chose so to treat it, & not necessarily one of construction, & their decision ought not to be disturbed.—*R. v. It is not necessary, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), that notice of appeal against an order of removal should be given fourteen days before the sessions at which such appeal is intended to be tried. The practice, with respect to the time for giving such notice, remains as it was before the passing of the Act.—R. v. DRAUGHTON (INHABITANTS) (1839), 2 Per. & Dav. 224; 8 L. J. M. C. 92; 3 J. 1501. Subject to practice of sessions.]—Under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, notice of appeal against an order of removal need not be given within twenty one days from the time of sending the notice of chargeability & the copies of the order & examination to the overseers of the parish charged by such order:—Held: the practice as to notices of appeal not being expressly altered by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), remained as before, although, by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, the statement of the grounds of appeal was required to be delivered with such notice, or at least fourteen days before the sessions; & therefore where, by the practice of the sessions, eight days' notice only was required, a notice of a given eight days before the sessions was sufficient, provided such statement of the grounds of appeal be delivered fourteen days before the sessions; at least where the delivery of such statement was accompanied with the service of a notice of appeal de facto, although such notice be erroneous, as purporting to be given for the borough, instead

1509. Necessity for statement.]—On the trial of an appeal against an order of removal, it appeared that appts. had given no statement of grounds of appeal: & the sessions thereupon dismissed the appeal, subject to a case. Afterwards, at the same session, which was the first after the order, an appeal was entered & respited. No case was drawn up; & on the second appeal coming on to be tried at the following sessions, the ct., finding that the order now appealed against was that which had been the subject of the former appeal, dismissed it, without further hearing:—Held: the dismissal was proper.—*R. v. 1512. — Calculation of time for.]—Where an act is required by statute to be done so many days at least before a given event, the time must be reckoned, excluding both the day of the act & that of the event. A statement of grounds of appeal under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, is not duly served unless fourteen days elapse between the day of service & the first day of the sessions at which the appeal is to be tried.—*R. v. 1513. Delivery of defective statement—Whether appeal adjourned—Where regular notice served.]—Semble, the statement of the grounds of appeal under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, must be sent or delivered to the overseers themselves; & service on their attorney is insufficient. But, assuming that to be so, the sessions, where such statement has been served on the attorney only, may, if they think fit, adjourn the appeal, such power being incident generally to them as a ct., except where taken away by statute. Qu: whether, there having been time to serve the statement regularly before the sessions at which the appeal is entered, & a statement having been served irregularly as above, appts. can, upon the sessions adjourning the appeal serve a fresh statement. "now residing" in the parish "upon the complaint" of one of the overseers on behalf of the others, without stating what the complaint was. The grounds of appeal were, (a) that it did not appear on the face of the examinations, or of any of them, that the justices had any jurisdiction to take the examinations or to make the order. (b) That it did not appear on the face of the examinations that the alleged complaint, recited in the heading of the examinations, was made to the justices or either of them within the local limits of their jurisdiction. (c) After setting out various specific objections to the examinations, "nor did it appear on the face of the examinations of what nature the complaint recited in the headings thereof really was, nor what was its purport or effect":—Held: the caption was bad, & the objection to it had been properly allowed by the sessions under the grounds of appeal.—R. v. ST. ANDREW'S, PLYMOUTH (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 191; 12 J. P. 774.

1520. ——— Irregularity rectified.—It is no sufficient ground of appeal against an order of removal, made before Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), founded upon examinations showing a settlement by apprenticeship to allege merely "that the covenant indenture mentioned in the examinations was not produced before the justices making the order, nor any copy of it sent with the examinations."—R. v. DALTON (INHABITANTS) (1850), 14 L. T. O. S. 485; 14 J. P. Jo. 111.

1521. ——— ——An order of removal was made by justices in respect of an alleged settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, which provides that an order of removal in respect of a settlement acquired under that sect. shall not be made upon the evidence of the person to be removed without such corroboration as the justices or ct. think sufficient. There was no corroborative evidence before the justices who made the order. Upon appeal to the quarter sessions against the order, the grounds of appeal were, (a) that the pauper had not acquired a settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34; & (b) that there was no corroborative evidence before the justices who made the order of removal. Corroborative evidence was tendered on behalf of resp. at the sessions, & received by the ct., who considered the same sufficient, but quashed the order of removal on the ground that, as a matter of law upon the facts proved, the pauper had not acquired a settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34:—Held: the sessions were right in receiving the corroborative evidence, but, the case being governed by R. v. Brampton Union, No. 490, ante, they were wrong in holding that the settlement was not acquired, & consequently the order of removal must stand good.—R. v. ABERGAVENNY UNION (1880), 6 Q. B. 1522. ——— Removal order defective.—A statement in an examination, that the pauper, "in or about the year 1832," was hired as a yearly servant, is insufficient, inasmuch as the hiring might have taken place after Aug. 14, 1833, & the year's service under it consequently have not been completed before Aug. 14, 1834, & so no settlement have been acquired, by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 65. A statement that the pauper, "being then unmarried & having no child or children," was hired by S. as a yearly servant, & served him under such yearly hiring for four years & more, & lived & lodged in applt. parish "for more than forty days next preceding the termination of the said service," was held insufficient, inasmuch as the language imported several yearly hirings, & it was not stated that, at the time of the last hiring, the pauper was unmarried & without child or children.—R. v. ST. ANNE, WESTMINSTER (INHABITANTS) (1846), 7 Q. B. 241; 2 New Sess. Cas. 393; 15 L. J. M. C. 119; 7 L. T. O. S. 225; 10 J. P. 518; 10 Jur. 494; 115 E. R. 480.

1523. ——— Failure to serve notice of chargeability.—Where an order of removal has been served upon a parish under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79, but without notice of chargeability the parish may take advantage of such omission as a ground of appeal against the order.—R. v. BRIKHAM (INHABITANTS) (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 375; 3 Nev. & P. K. B. 408; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 356; 7 L. J. M. C. 87; 2 J. P. 440; 2 Jur. 441; 112 E. R. 880.

1524. ——— ——Under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), & Poor Law Procedure Act (c. 31), s. 9, the sessions have no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against an order of removal, where notice of chargeability has not been served on the parish to which the removal is ordered.—R. v. SHREWSBURY RECORDER (1853), 1 E. & B. 711; 1 C. L. R. 49; 22 L. J. M. C. 98; 21 L. T. O. S. 58; 17 J. P. 503; 17 Jur. 547; 1 W. R. 287; 118 E. R. 603.

1525. ——— Inadmissible evidence of settlement.—It is a good ground of appeal, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, against an order of removal, that the examination upon which it was made, though it sets forth facts which show a settlement, does not disclose any legal evidence of such facts. Therefore, where an order of removal was made upon the examinations of the pauper & his father, in which the father stated that the place of his father's settlement was E., as he had heard his father say & believed to be true, & that he had heard his father say he had received relief from the overseers of E.; & the pauper himself stated that his father's place of settlement was at E., as he had heard him say & believed to be true:—Held: such order was bad on an appeal stating, as one of the grounds, that the order was "bad & inoperative," & the examinations on which it was made "defective & insufficient to ground & support the same."—R. v. ECCLESALL BIERLOW (INHABITANTS) (1841), 11 Ad. & El. 607; 1 Gal. & Dav. 160; 10 L. J. M. C. 90; 5 J. P. 595; 5 Jur. 460; 113 E. R. 544. *Annotations:—Appld. R. v. 1529. — Settlement by renting—Omission of residence.—[The grounds of appeal against an order of removal stated a subsequent settlement as follows: "That T." (the father of an unemancipated pauper), "in Nov. 1832, rented a house at E." (third parish), "from M., at the rent of £10 & upwards, & occupied the same under such renting or hiring from that time until Michaelmas, 1836, & paid rent for the same, & was assessed to & paid the poor rate for the same during the whole of that time." The sessions quashed the order of removal, subject to a case, which showed that evidence was given of T. having in fact resided in E. for more than a year from Nov. 1832, & having rented, etc., as alleged in the grounds of removal; & which also stated, as the finding of the sessions, that T., "by renting & occupying premises in the manner aforesaid, had gained a settlement in E."; & which left, as a question for the ct., "whether the statement of the grounds of appeal was sufficient":—Held: (1) the grounds of appeal were insufficient, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, for not showing a residence in E.; (2) the finding of the sessions did not preclude this ct. from disaffirming the settlement in E., on the deficiency of the statement in the grounds of appeal.—R. v. 1530. Denial of settlement in appellant parish—Children in respondent parish—Nature of settlement not indicated.—[The parish of G. gave notice to the parish of P. of an appeal against an order removing H. & his wife, & children of the wife by a former husband, being under the age of sixteen, from P. to G., stating, as the ground of appeal, that H. was not settled in G., setting out objections to this settlement, & that the children were settled in P., not stating what the nature of their settlement was:—Held: this was sufficient notice, as to the children, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, & the sessions having refused to receive evidence as to the settlement of the children, distinct from that of the husband, on the ground of insufficiency of notice, this ct. issued a mandamus commanding them to enter continuances & hear the appeal.—R. v. 1532. — Omission from statement—Whether proof by respondent necessary.—[Where a notice, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, states, as the ground of appeal against an order of removal, that the pauper was settled in a third parish, not adding, as a ground, that he had no settlement in applt. parish, resps. are not bound to prove a settlement there. If, in proof of a settlement by renting a tenement, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, a writing not under seal be produced, demising land, & also professing to demise incorporeal hereditaments, at an entire rent, evidence may be given to show how much of such rent the land was worth. If the amount is £10 a year, & the land has been occupied, & rent paid, according to the statute, the settlement is good. The instrument above described reserved a rent of £75, & had a stamp of £1 10s.:—Held: sufficient: & the writing did not require to be stamped as a lease not otherwise charged, under Stamp Act, 1815 (c. 184), Sched. part 1.—R. v. 1533. — Grounds for denial insufficiently stated.—[Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), ss. 1, 2, provides several requisites to the due binding of parish apprentices; among others, that the binding be ordered, & indenture allowed & signed, by particular justices; & where the child is bound by a parish to a party residing in another parish, that notice be given to the overseers of the latter, & proved, or admitted before the justices by one of such overseers personally, before the indenture be signed. Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), s. 5, enacts that no settlement shall be gained by such apprenticeship unless such order be made, & such allowances signed, "as herein-before directed." An applt. parish stated, Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, as the ground of appeal against a removal founded on a settlement by parish apprenticeship, "that the requisites of Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), & more particularly Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), s. 5, were not complied with":—Held: applt. parish could not, under this statement, dispute the settlement at sessions, on the ground that their overseers had no notice, & were not present at the binding.—R. v. WHITLEY UPPER (INHABITANTS) (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 90; 3 Per. & Dav. 81; 9 L. J. M. C. 12; 4 J. P. 20; 4 Jur. 23; 113 E. R. 348.

Appls. gave notice of appeal, on the ground that the pauper did not acquire a settlement in applt. parish by reason of his being bound an apprentice by indenture, dated, etc., to one, etc., & by serving, etc., because the premium of £15 was paid by parish officers, & not by the pauper's father, & "that the requisitions of Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), "made for the regulation & binding of parish apprentices, then in force, were not complied with." of the appeal, the sessions held that the execution of the indenture was not admitted by the notice of grounds of appeal, & that resps. were bound to begin by proving their case; which not being done, they quashed the order, subject to a case, which provided that the order of sessions, if the sessions were wrong, was to be quashed, & the appeal reheard. This ct., holding that the execution of the indenture was admitted, & that appls. ought to have begun by establishing their objection, quashed the order of sessions; but did not send the case back to be reheard.—*R. v. The clerk added a sched., stating, among other particulars, that the paupers were settled in Wigan. The L. union thereupon advanced money to the paupers, & the sum was repaid to them by the clerk of W. union:—Held: on appeal against an order of removal to Wigan, that these facts were prima facie evidence of an acknowledgment by Wigan that the paupers were settled there, without proof of a written order by the W. guardians, & without further evidence of the circumstances under which the clerk was directed to write.—*R. v. this ct. will therefore compel them to hear by mandamus, if their decision is wrong.

(2) A ground of appeal, stating that resp. parish have acknowledged the pauper's husband to be an inhabitant of & legally settled in their parish, by relieving the said husband & the said pauper, as part of his family, from time to time, during the last six years whilst the said husband & the said pauper were resident in other places out of resp. parish; & particularly by giving relief to the said pauper, as part of his family, several times in the years 1839 & 1840, during which he & his family were residing in the town of Liverpool:—Held: sufficient.—R. v. HOLME ST. CUTHBERT'S (INHABITANTS) (1847), 2 New Mag. Cas. 92; 8 L. T. O. S. 444; 11 J. P. 134.

1541. ————]—Settlement alleged in another parish—Inadequate statement.]—(1) Appls. against an order of removal stated, as their grounds of appeal, that the pauper, subsequently to the settlement alleged to have been obtained by her in applt. parish, gained a settlement in another parish by hiring & service for a year & upwards; & also that she gained a settlement subsequent to that first mentioned, by hiring & service for a year & upwards, & by having served several years under a general hiring, in resp. parish. The statement did not specify dates or names:—Held: an insufficient statement, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81.

1543. ————]—Objection for uncertainty.]—A ground of appeal, which stated that B. the husband of the pauper, who was removed by the order to her maiden settlement, was born in or about the year 1810, in the parish of P. in the county of S. was objected to for uncertainty:—Held: the ground of appeal was sufficient, & the sessions were wrong in refusing to receive evidence in support of it.—R. v. EALING (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 178, n.; 3 New Mag. Cas. 159; 3 New Sess. Cas. 514; 18 L. J. M. C. 185; 13 L. T. O. S. 115; 13 Jur. 470; 13 J. P. Jo. 297; 116 E. R. 834.

1544. ————]—Proof of settlement in respondent parish.]—(1) The examination of a pauper showed that he was born in applt. parish, & was afterwards bound & served as apprentice, & inhabited, under such service, partly in applt. parish & partly in resp. parish, & more than forty days in each. Resps. proposed, at the sessions, to rely on the birth settlement:—Held: they were not precluded from so doing, by the fact that the examination contained allegations which, if true, showed a subsequent settlement by apprenticeship.

(2) Appls. relied upon a settlement in resp. parish, & proved that, on the last night of the service, the pauper slept in that parish:—Held: to establish this settlement, they must prove the apprenticeship, & could not treat it as admitted by resps., though the latter had sent examinations in which it was alleged, & it had not been traversed by the grounds of appeal.—R. v. LATCHFORD (INHABITANTS) (1844), 6 Q. B. 567; 1 Dav. & Mer. 290; 1 New Mag. Cas. 147; 1 New Sess. Cas. 387; 14 L. J. M. C. 20; 4 L. T. O. S. 133; 9 J. P. 132; 8 Jur. 1094; 115 E. R. 212.

1545. — Derivative settlement—Alternative settlement untraversed.—An examination, transmitted with an order of removal, began thus. "The examination of A. B., now resident," etc., "taken before us, C. D. & E. F., two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace in & for the county of Salop, upon the complaint," etc., "this Jan. 25, 1847. The said examinant, A. B., upon his oath saith," etc. At the foot were the words "Taken & sworn at E.," in Salop, "this Jan. 25, 1847. C. D., E. F." The examination stated that the pauper was born in applt. parish, & had done no act to gain a settlement; & it then went into a detail of facts showing a derivative settlement in the same parish, acquired by the pauper through his father:—Held: resps. were entitled, at the sessions, to abandon the derivative & rely upon the birth settlement, & thereupon to have the order of removal confirmed, the birth settlement not being traversed by the grounds of appeal.—R. v. ELLESMERE (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 19; 3 New Mag. Cas. 103; 3 New Sess. Cas. 551; 18 L. J. M. C. 181; 13 L. T. O. S. 232; 13 Jur. 657; 13 J. P. Jo. 346; 116 E. R. 772.

Annotation:—Refd. R. v. St. Mary in Bungay (1849), 12 Q. B. 38.

1546. — Inquiries by respondents.—On appeal against an order of removal of an illegitimate child under the age of sixteen years, whereby such child was adjudged to be settled in the place of its birth, it was admitted by resps. that the child's mother was still living; but no evidence was given to show that she had any settlement, nor, on the other hand, was there any evidence of failure by resps. to make inquiries:—Held: in the absence of proof that the mother had a settlement elsewhere, the burden of which proof, there being no evidence of failure by resps. to make inquiries, was upon appls.; the child must be deemed to be settled in the place of its birth.—HEADINGTON UNION v. IPSWICH UNION (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 143; 59 L. J. M. C. 92; 62 L. T. 786; 54 J. P. 516; 38 W. R. 586, C. A.

1547. — Onus of proof.—An order of justices for removing the wife & daughters of a pauper to the place of their settlement is supported prima facie by showing that the parish to which the removal was made was the place of settlement of the wife before her marriage; although it also appeared by a copy of the marriage register that the husband was therein described to be of another parish; which description was held to be no evidence of his having a settlement there: & such evidence throws the burden of proof upon appls., that the husband was settled in another parish.—R. v. HARBERTON (INHABITANTS) (1811), 13 East, 311; 104 E. R. 390.

Annotations:—Follid. R. v. Yelvertoft (1845), 6 Q. B. 801. Refd. R. v. Cottingham (1827), 7 B. & C. 615; R. v. St. Mary Beverley (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 201; R. v. Birmingham (1846), 8 Q. B. 410; Rotherghlen Parish Council v. Glasgow Parish Council, [1902] A. C. 360.

].—The only settlement disclosed by the examinations was the birth settlement of the pauper's late husband:—Held: under a ground of appeal which stated generally that "the pauper was not at the time of the order, nor was the late husband at the time of his decease, legally settled" in applt. parish, resps. were bound to give evidence of the birth of the pauper's late husband in applt. parish, though there was no ground of appeal traversing the fact of his being born there, or alleging that he was born elsewhere.—R. v. St. GILES, COLCHESTER (INHABITANTS) (1848), 12 Q. B. 13; 3 New Mag. Cas. 6; 3 New Sess. Cas. 240; 17 L. J. M. C. 148; 11 L. T. O. S. 434; 12 J. P. 645; 12 Jur. 726; 116 E. R. 770.

1549. — Rectifiable error in statement.—A pauper was removed on an examination, taken May 1, 1847, stating a settlement through a binding, in 1804, by indenture of apprenticeship, which was destroyed thirty-eight years ago, & service thereunder & residence. The ground of appeal was that the pauper "was not, in the year 1834, legally bound apprentice" "as stated in the examination." The sessions held that the apprenticeship was not traversed, & confirmed the order, subject to a case, stating the facts as above, & that the order of sessions was to be quashed if this ct. should be of opinion that the grounds of appeal did raise an issue on the question of settlement:—Held: the order of sessions was wrong, & must be quashed, inasmuch as it could be collected from the examination & statement of grounds that resps. could not have been misled by the variance in the latter as to the date; & such date must be rejected as insensible.—R. v. ASTON NIGH BIRMINGHAM (INHABITANTS) (1849), 12 Q. B. 26; 4 New Mag. Cas. 13; 3 New Sess. Cas. 661; 19 L. J. M. C. 17; 14 L. T. O. S. 153; 14 J. P. 208; 13 Jur. 1077; 116 E. R. 775.

1550. — Proof of settlement by respondents.—H., the wife of W., having been removed to her maiden settlement, upon the hearing of an appeal against the order of removal, resps. proved that the maiden settlement of H. was in applt. parish, & also that W. was born in the city of Ipswich where there were several parishes, but in which of them did not appear:—Held: as it was incumbent on resps. to show that the pauper was settled in the parish to which the removal was made, & as they had disproved that by showing that the husband had a birth settlement in some parish in Ipswich, the sessions ought to have quashed the order of removal.—R. v. St. MARY, BEVERLEY (INHABITANTS) (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 201; 9 L. J. O. S. M. C. 17; 109 E. R. 762.

1551. ——Under the general ground of appeal "that the statements contained in the said examinations are not true," appls. are entitled to call upon resps. to prove the settlement relied upon in the examinations.

It is for the sessions to consider any question of inconvenience arising from such general ground of appeal, & if it amounts to a frivolous & vexatious statement, to award costs under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), & Poor Law Procedure

1553. Where appeal adjourned—Amended statement served.—For ensuing sessions.]—If appts. serve a statement of the grounds of appeal, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, fourteen days before the sessions for which notice of trying the appeal is given, & the appeal be entered & adjourned, they may, fourteen days before the sessions to which the adjournment is made, serve another statement, varying from the first, & treat such new statement as the only one.—*R. v. 1554. —[On appeal against an order of removal, appts., under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, served a statement of grounds of objection, which only impugned the alleged settlement. On the hearing of the appeal the bench, being equally divided, adjourned the case to the next sessions. Before the next sessions, appts. served another statement, containing an objection to the notice of chargeability under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 79. The sessions having quashed the order of removal, on the objection last mentioned:—Held: the objection ought not to have been entertained, since it was not mentioned in the original statement of grounds of appeal; & the ct. sent the case back to sessions to be heard on the merits.—*R. v. 1555. —[Appts. against an order of removal delivered to resps. notice of trial of the appeal, & a statement of grounds of appeal, fourteen days before the then next sessions. The appeal came on at those sessions. After resps.' counsel had begun to state his case, the sessions, on the application of appts.' counsel, adjourned the appeal to the next sessions, on the ground of the absence, through illness, of a material witness. Fourteen days before the sessions to which the appeal was adjourned, appts. delivered a fresh statement of grounds of appeal, raising several new grounds. At the adjourned hearing, resps. objected to any fresh grounds being entered upon: but the sessions overruled the objection, & quashed the order on evidence given solely in support of one of the new grounds. On a case stated by the sessions:—Held: the trial of the appeal having been adjourned, the sessions to which it was adjourned were "the sessions at which such appeal" was "intended to be tried," within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81; & appts. were entitled to deliver fresh grounds of appeal fourteen days before those sessions.—*R. v. 1556. Extent of amendment permitted—Jurisdiction of justices.]—The powers of amendment of grounds of removal or of appeal conferred upon quarter sessions by Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 4, extend to the addition of an entirely new ground. The decision of the sessions as to such amendment is final.

Where the sessions upon the hearing of an appeal against an order of removal, added a new ground of removal setting up a previous order for the removal of the same pauper, which had not been appealed against:—Held: such an amendment was within the jurisdiction conferred upon them by Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 4, & this ct. had no power to interfere.—R. v. LIANGENNY (INHABITANTS) (1863), 4 B. & S. 311; 32 L. J. M. C. 265; 10 Jur. N. S. 126; 122 E. R. 476; sub nom. LIANGENY v. MERTHYR TYDFIL, 8 L. T. 696; 27 J. P. 452.

WESTMORELAND JJ.* (1735), 2 Sess. Cas. K. B. 352; 2 Bott. 734; 93 E. R. 227.

1559. —[For attendance of pauper.]—The sessions are not warranted in refusing to hear an appeal against an order of removal, because appts. do not produce the pauper; they tendering evidence that he had absconded, & that they had bonâ fide used due diligence to find him out.

Nor are they warranted in so refusing, although appts. had previously obtained an adjournment, to enable them to find out the pauper, upon an understanding that no further time should be applied for.—R. v. CORNWALL JJ. (1831), 9 L. J. O. S. M. C. 82.

1560. —[Material witness absent—Conditional on payment of costs.]—On appeal against an order of removal both parties attended at sessions, full notice of appeal having been given, & no countermand. Appls. then moved to enter the appeal, & to respite it, on the ground of a material witness being absent. The sessions refused to comply with the motion, unless on payment of the costs of the day, which it was their practice to require in such cases; & the appeal was not entered. On motion for a mandamus:—Held: the sessions had exercised a proper discretion in refusing to respite, & their not having entered the appeal was immaterial.—*R. v. (2) Pauper was removed to his mother's maiden settlement in Y. His father, in the examination, stated that he believed that he himself was born in London, but had never heard in what parish, & had never done any act to gain a settlement in his own right:—Held: on proof of the mother's settlement in Y., the justices might remove pauper thither, & that, on appeal against the removal, resps., at sessions, might rely prima facie on the mother's maiden settlement, without proving any inquiry made as to the settlement of the father.

(3) The mother's brother, in the examination, stated that she was born at Y. & was the person mentioned in a certificate of baptism, which was produced, & at the date of which he was less than four years old:—Held: to be evidence, on which the removing magistrates might act, of the mother's birth in Y.—*R. v. 1565. Former order of sessions—How far conclusive.]—Where, upon the hearing of an appeal, a former order of sessions, quashing an order of removal between the same parishes, is relied upon by one party, it is competent to the other party to give evidence of the grounds upon which that order of sessions was made; & if it appear that they were independent of the merits, the order is not conclusive.—R. v. WORCESTERSHIRE JJ. (1828), 7 L. J. O. S. M. C. 72.

1566. ———.]—Where, on the trial of an appeal against an order of removal, appls. produced a former order between the same parties, which had been quashed generally, & resps. tendered evidence of the circumstances under which it had been quashed, namely that they had abandoned it on account of some defect in form, without going to the sessions:—Held: the sessions were bound to receive such evidence &, having refused, a mandamus issued to compel them to hear.—*R. v. It was proved that on the former occasion the assistant overseer of the removing parish delivered the paupers, together with a true copy of the order, to the overseers of applt. parish; who received them, sent them to a house for the night, & gave them relief the next morning:—Held: sufficient evidence, from which the sessions might infer that the order had been properly served.—*R. v. 1572. Evidence for appellants—Confined to particulars of grounds of appeal.]—A pauper being removed to a parish as settled there by hiring & service, the parish gave notice of appeal, stating, as the ground (pursuant to Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81), that the pauper, at his hiring, stipulated to have two days' holidays at Spalding Club Feast in July; & that he had such holidays during his year of service. On the hearing of the appeal, the pauper, called for resps., proved on cross-examination that he, at his hiring, bargained for one day's holiday to go to Holbeach Fair, & had it during the year; but that he did not bargain for, or have, any holiday at Spalding Club Feast. The sessions having found an exceptive hiring, subject to the opinion of this ct. whether evidence as to the one day's holiday was admissible:—Held: under the notice given, such evidence could not be received.—R. v. HOLBEACH (INHABITANTS) (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 085; 2 Har. & W. 414; 1 Nev. & P. K. B. 137; Nev. & P. M. C. 20; 6 L. J. M. C. 5; 111 E. R. 1824.

1574. ———.]—An order for the removal of H., widow, from S. to B. was made, on an examination showing that she was sent to B. as the settlement of her deceased husband; that in 1815 an estate in B. was given by oral grant to the husband's father, who entered upon & occupied it for thirteen years, during which time he paid the poor rates as occupier; that from 1815 the pauper's husband lived on the estate with his father as part of his family; & that he was married to pauper in 1826, when he was residing with his father on the estate. The examination did not show that the rate books were produced before the removing, or that evidence was given to account for the non-production. The grounds of appeal, after traversing the several grounds of removal in fact, &, amongst others, the payment of rates by the father, objected "that the examination is informal & wholly insufficient in law, & bad on the face of it; that the examination does not contain any sufficient evidence of a settlement gained" by the father: & that the examination does not show in what year the father paid rates: nor a sufficient residence by the father, nor that the husband was unemancipated at the time of his marriage: with other specific objections: but there was no specific objection to the non-production of the rate books. The sessions quashed the order, finding that resps. were entitled to judgment on the merits, but that the examination was insufficient on the face of it; on which point, however, they desired the opinion of this ct.:—Held: under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 81, on these grounds of appeal appls. could not insist that the examination did not show any proof given of the father having been actually rated; the general ground conveying no information as to that point, & the specific grounds rather leading to the conclusion that appls. did not mean to take it.—R. v. STAPLE FITZPAINE (INHABITANTS) (1842), 2 Q. B. 488; 1 Gal. & Dav. 605; 11 L. J. M. C. 38; 6 J. P. 89; 6 Jur. 277; 114 E. R. 192.

1576. ———.]—In the examinations on which an order of removal from the township of L. to the parish of C. was founded, M. stated that she was the widow of A., who was born at C. of parents settled there, as she believed; & J. stated that he was an elder brother of A., who was born in C. The grounds of appeal alleged that the order, notice of chargeability, & examinations were bad on the faces thereof, & that the examinations contained no legal evidence of the pauper's settlement in C., or of their having come to settle in, or being chargeable to L. At the trial of the appeal, appls. contended that the examinations did not show that the A. mentioned by the widow was the same A. mentioned by J. Resps. objected that this point was not raised by the grounds of appeal. The sessions quashed the order on the point raised by appls. A rule nisi for a mandamus having been obtained:—Held: the objection was sufficiently raised by the grounds of appeal, & the decision of the justices was final.—*R. v. 1577. — — —.]—(1) On appeal against an order of removal, appls. offered evidence of a former judgment of quarter sessions quashing an order of removal founded on the same alleged settlement. The order of sessions, as entered on their minutes, stated that the order of removal was quashed "on the ground that the examinations are insufficient to support the same":—Held: this entry was general enough to let in evidence on the part of resps. that the adjudication proceeded on matter of form, not merits.

(2) To make the examination of a person in custody admissible under Poor Relief Act, 1819 (c. 12), s. 28, on a question of settlement, it must be proved expressly that the party was in custody, as required by the statute, at the very time when such examination was tendered in evidence.

(3) The wife & children of B., were removed on examinations showing settlement of B. by hiring & service under C., & by birth. Appls. stated as distinct grounds of appeal: that the parents of B. were removed to, & acknowledged as settled inhabitants by, a third parish, & that he had acquired no settlement in his own right: that B. did not become settled in applt. parish by hiring & service under C.: & that the paupers were not settled in applt. parish in any manner whatever:—Held: appls. could not give evidence that B. was not born in applt. parish.—*R. v. 1581. Evidence of respondents—Confined to grounds for removal in depositions.—The parish of S., removing a pauper to M., sent to M. his examination, which stated that the pauper was hired by one D. P. of T., to serve him for a year, from May Day, 1829; that pauper went into his service in the parish of T.; that, when he had been there a fortnight, his master said that the servant of his mother, Mrs. P., of M., did not suit, & proposed to pauper to go & live with Mrs. P. instead of him; & that pauper consented, went to M., & served the remainder of his year with Mrs. P., without any fresh agreement. M. appealed, stating, by their notice of grounds of appeal, that the pauper did not gain any settlement in M. by reason of his having been hired by D. P. of T. to serve him for a year, & having served D. P. for a fortnight in T., & D. P.'s mother for the rest of the year in M., under the circumstances stated in the examination; & that pauper's contract of service with D. P. was dissolved on pauper's leaving the same. At the sessions, resps. opened as their case, that the pauper had been hired by & served D. P., father of the above-mentioned D. P., & husband of Mrs. P., for a year ending at May Day, 1829; that the hiring in 1829 was by D. P. the younger, as agent for his father, & that the pauper in fact served for the whole year, beginning on May Day, 1829, under the original hiring made on behalf of D. P., the father. The sessions received proof of this case, & confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the ct. of K. In pursuance of a rule of practice of the sessions, that “whenever any order of removal shall be quashed, otherwise than on the merits, a minute of the grounds of the judgment shall be entered on record,” the judgment was entered by direction of the ct. in the following form: “order of justices quashed, the merits of the case not being inquired into.” Resps. afterwards obtained another order of removal to the parish of applt. on appeal from which it was contended, that the quashing of the former order was conclusive:—Held: the judgment of the ct. of quarter sessions was not conclusive.—*R. v. #### (i) Costs.

1600. Discretion to allow.—Allowance of costs on appeal from order is in the discretion of sessions.—R. v. NOTTINGHAM J.J. (1719), 2 Bott. 776.

1601. Where appeal abandoned—Judgment given by default—Absence of jurisdiction.—Parish officers, having given notice of appeal against an order of removal, served a countermand, stating that they did so on account of the absence of a witness, but should give fresh notice of appeal. The countermand was too late for the sessions. At the sessions, resps. entered the appeal & moved for costs. The sessions made an order, whereby, after reciting that service of notice of appeal on resps. had been proved, & that no one appeared for appls. to prosecute such appeal, they adjudged that the order of removal should be confirmed, & that appls. should forthwith pay resps. £15 for their costs & charges which they had incurred & been put to in attending the sessions that day to support the order:—Held: the order of confirmation was bad for want of jurisdiction, & the order for costs could not be separated from it; & therefore the whole must be quashed.—R. v. STOKES BLISS (INHABITANTS) (1844), 6 Q. B. 158; 1 Dav. & Mer. 135; 1 New Mag. Cas. 61; 1 New Sess. Cas. 267; 13 L. J. M. C. 151; 3 L. T. O. S. 179; 8 J. P. 675; 8 Jur. 536; 115 E. R. 61.

1602. ————.]—Appls. entered & respited an appeal against an order of removal, but did not deliver grounds of appeal. Afterwards they gave notice of abandoning their appeal, but did not satisfy resps. as to costs. Resps., therefore, went to the next quarter sessions, & moved, appls. not being present, that the order might be confirmed. The sessions confirmed the order of removal, & awarded costs to be paid by appls. to resps.:—Held: on certiorari & motion to quash, although the confirmation was an excess of authority, the order of sessions was valid as to the award of costs.—R. v. OVER (INHABITANTS) (1849), 14 Q. B. 425; 4 New Mag. Cas. 4; 4 New Sess. Cas. 77; 19 L. J. M. C. 57; 14 L. T. O. S. 269; 14 J. P. 176; 14 Jur. 197; 117 E. R. 166.

1603. ————.]—If resp. parish give notice to applt. parish, under Poor Law Procedure Act, 1848 (c. 31), s. 8, that they abandon their appeal against an order of removal, the ct. of quarter sessions have no power to proceed with the appeal, though it has been respited on terms at a previous session; & if they make an order quashing the appeal, & giving costs to appls., such order is null, & cannot be removed into the Ct. of Q. B. for the purpose of being enforced.—KILLYMAENLLWYDD v. ST. MICHAEL'S, PEMBROKE (1852), 21 L. J. M. C. 79; sub nom., Ex p. KELLYMAENLLWYD OVERSEERS, Bail Ct. Cas. 22; sub nom. R. v. ST. MICHAEL'S, PEMBROKE, 18 L. T. O. S. 262; 16 J. P. 150; 16 Jur. 87.

1604. ————.]—Overseers of a parish, on which an order of removal of a pauper had been made by two borough justices, gave notice of an appeal against the order to the next quarter sessions for the county in which the borough was situate. The borough had a separate ct. of quarter sessions, which alone had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The day before the borough sessions next after the notice of appeal were held, appls. gave notice to resps. that, finding that the sessions for the county had no jurisdiction, they abandoned the appeal. Appls. did not appear, & resps. did, at the borough sessions; which ct. on the application of resps. dismissed the appeal, & made an order for the payment by appls. to resps. of the costs incurred by the latter in the appeal:—Held: discharging a rule for a certiorari to bring up this order, the order was rightly made, the borough sessions would have had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, if persisted in; the erroneous statement in the notice of appeal that the appeal would be made to the county sessions being merely surplusage, & upon the abandonment of the appeal, the borough sessions had jurisdiction under Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (c. 45), s. 6.—R. v. LEEDS RECORDER (1861), 3 E. & E. 561; 30 L. J. M. C. 86; 3 L. T. 699; 25 J. P. 389; 7 Jur. N. S. 210; 9 W. R. 270; 121 E. R. 553.

1610. — Legality of marriage disputed—Duty of magistrates to hear case.]—On complaint against a party as a vagrant, for refusing to maintain his wife, the party charged, being called upon by the justices in petty sessions to show cause for his refusal, denied being married to the woman, & produced some evidence in support of such denial: & he threatened the magistrates with an action if they committed him. Complainants offered evidence of a Gretna Green marriage: but the justices refused to hear it, & dismissed the summons, saying that they would not, on this application, try a disputed marriage, alleged to have taken place out of the country, & that the parties ought to try it in the Ecclesiastical Ct.:—Held: the justices could not, under these circumstances, refuse to hear the case through; & a mandamus was granted, requiring them to hear the complaint.—*R. v. 1611. — Wife refusing to live with husband—No evidence of refusal to support.]—Upon conviction of a man, under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, for wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain his wife, a case was stated by the magistrates under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857 (c. 43), s. 2. The statement was that it appeared on the hearing that applt. on a former occasion, his wife having before that been relieved by the parish while living apart from him, had been summoned & had then promised to make her a weekly allowance, which he had since failed to do, & the wife had been supported by the parish since then; that, at the hearing on which the conviction appealed against took place, he offered to repay what the parish had paid, & to receive his wife; that evidence was given to the satisfaction of the magistrates that he had ill used his wife, who thereupon refused to live with him; that applt. undertook to treat her kindly; that the magistrates were satisfied that he had for a length of time neglected to support her & that the offer to receive her was only to screen himself from the consequences of the neglect:—Held: the conviction was wrong, for that, assuming the fact of ill usage sufficient to constitute a ground for the wife's refusal to live with applt., there was no evidence of a refusal to support her.—FLANNAGAN v. BISHOP WEARMOUTH OVERSEERS (1857), 8 E. & B. 451; 27 L. J. M. C. 46; 30 L. T. O. S. 117; 22 J. P. 464; 3 Jur. N. S. 1103; 120 E. R. 168; sub nom. R. v. BISHOP WEARMOUTH OVERSEERS, 6 W. R. 38.

1612. — No notice of application for relief—Offer to recoup guardians.]—E.'s wife having applied for relief, the guardians summoned E. under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3. It was proved that E. was an able-bodied man, & able to maintain his family if he chose, but E. contended that he had got no notice of his wife's application for relief, & that this proceeding was instigated by spite, & that he had offered to recoup the guardians who refused to accept payment. The justices having dismissed the summons:—Held: there being some evidence the judgment of the justices could not be interfered with.—REEVE v. EASTWOOD (1888), 53 J. P. 134, D. C.

1614. — Where separation order granted—& wife given custody of children.]—Resp., a married man with four children under sixteen years of age, was able wholly to maintain his family by work. By an order of a ct. of summary jurisdiction under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5, it was ordered that his wife should be no longer bound to cohabit with him, that she should have the legal custody of the children, & that he should pay to his wife the weekly sum of 7s. 6d. Resp. did not pay any of the weekly sums, & shortly afterwards two of his children under sixteen became chargeable to the union. Upon an information under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, charging him with having wilfully neglected & refused to maintain his family by work, whereby his two children became chargeable, the justices held that, owing to the existence of the order giving the wife the custody of the children & ordering resp. to pay her a weekly sum, they had no jurisdiction to convict resp.:—Held: the existence of the order under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5, did not affect resp.'s legal obligation to maintain his children, & the order, being disobeyed, was no defence to the charge of wilfully neglecting & refusing to maintain his children.—*SHAFTESBURY UNION v. 1615. Neglect to provide self-maintenance—Illness due to drunkenness.]—Where a person at the time of his becoming chargeable to a union is owing to illness unable to maintain himself, the fact that that illness was the result of drunkenness does not cause his inability to amount to a wilful refusal or neglect to maintain himself within the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3.—*ST. 1616. — Trade strike.]—The classes of persons who are entitled to poor relief are still, notwithstanding subsequent legislation, the same as those mentioned in Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), s. 1. Able-bodied men who can, if they choose, obtain work which will enable them to maintain themselves, their wives & families, but who, by reason of a strike or otherwise, refuse to accept that work, are not entitled to relief, except that, if they become physically incapable of working, the guardians, may, to prevent them starving, give them temporary relief. But in that case the guardians ought to prosecute them under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, as "idle & disorderly persons."—A.-G. v. MERTHYR TYDFIL UNION, [1900] 1 Ch. 516; 69 L. J. 1617. — Offer of work refused—Irrelevant conditions attached.]—An able-bodied pauper was offered work at a farm colony, in return for which he was to receive board & lodging & a small weekly payment; the offer was subject to certain conditions (inter alia) that he would not only not enter any premises where intoxicating drink was sold, but would discourage others from doing so; that he would attend the meetings on Saturday nights of the particular body to which the colony belonged & special meetings fixed from time to time, & would attend some place of worship once on a Sunday. The pauper refused to sign an agreement embodying those terms & left the colony, & again became chargeable to the parish:—Held: in considering whether the refusal of the pauper to accept work was reasonable, regard must be had to the conditions upon which the work was offered; in order to constitute a wilful refusal or neglect within Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, the conditions attached to the offer of work must be such as relate to the work itself or to the workman's conduct in its performance; the above-mentioned conditions, though not in themselves unreasonable conditions to attach to an offer of employment, were not such that a refusal to accept work on such conditions amounted to a wilful refusal or neglect on the part of the pauper to maintain himself, & he was therefore not liable to be convicted as an idle & disorderly person.—*POPLAR UNION v. 1618. — Wages lower than trade union rate.]—On an appeal to quarter sessions by N. against his conviction under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, for wilfully refusing & neglecting to maintain himself & his family whereby he & they became chargeable to applt. union, it was proved that N. was able to work & was offered suitable work at a weekly wage of £2 6s.; that he worked at that wage for several days & then declined to do so any longer, as the rate of pay was less than the current trade union rate, namely, £3 2s. 8d.; & that in consequence of his refusal to work he was unable to maintain himself & his family, whereby they became chargeable to applt. union. In his evidence N. stated that he was anxious to earn his own living, & that he was willing to work for £2 6s. a week & keep his wife & family, but that he was informed by his trade union that he must not work for less than the trade union rate. Evidence was also given by a trade union official that if N. had continued to work for £2 6s. a week he would have been challenged by his union, would have had to give an explanation, & might have been reprimanded or fined or expelled from the union, which expulsion would make it difficult for him to get work in the future. On that evidence quarter sessions were satisfied that N. by continuing to work for £2 6s. a week would have been, in the circumstances, losing chances of bettering himself & would have materially hurt his chances of employment in the future; they accordingly quashed the conviction:—Held: it was open to quarter sessions on the facts before them, to come to the conclusion they did.—*LEWISHAM UNION v. See Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3.

1627. General rule.—Under that Act (Vagrancy Act) a person begging may be convicted of being an idle & disorderly person; if convicted again of the same offence he may be convicted of being a rogue & vagabond, & if convicted again of the same offence he may be convicted of being an incorrigible rogue (DARLING, J.).—*R. v. 1628. Workman on strike soliciting subscriptions.—Colliers "on strike" who were householders in a colliery district, & had wives & families, went from house to house in a street of a town four miles distance with a waggon inscribed "Children's Bread Waggon," & begged for assistance in money or kind. They were not disorderly. Having been convicted under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, which enacts that every person wandering abroad in any public highway to beg or gather alms shall be deemed an idle & disorderly person:—Held: as it was not their habit & mode of life to wander abroad & beg, they were not within the meaning of the Act, & the conviction was wrong.—POINTON v. HILL (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 306; 53 L. J. M. C. 62; 50 L. T. 268; 48 J. P. 341; 32 W. R. 478; 15 Cox, C. C. 461, D. C. Annotation.—Consd. Mathers v. Penfold, [1915] 1 K. B. 514.

1629.—Resp. went up to several persons in succession in St. James's Square, Westminster, & the immediate neighbourhood, & asked them to buy some tickets which he then had in his possession at the same time asking them to assist him as he was out of work through the strike hereinafter mentioned. In no case did any of the persons solicited buy any of the tickets or give resp. any money. There was a dispute in the building trade in consequence of which resp. who was a member of the Shamrock branch of the United Order of General Labourers, an affiliated union under the Federation of Building Trade Unions, was out of work. The Shamrock branch had organised a collection of funds to relieve their members who were out of work & their families, & in order to check the collectors the system of tickets was instituted. Resp. had possession of the tickets in pursuance of this scheme & was fully authorised by the branch to collect subscriptions. The money so collected was divided equally amongst certain members of the Shamrock branch who were out of work, including resp. quite irrespective of the fact that some collected & some did not:—Held: resp. was not begging within Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, inasmuch as a person who is found in the street making or assisting to make a bonâ fide collection for a charitable object is not within either the mischief or the language of the statute.

In order to establish that a person has committed an offence within the sect, it is not necessary to prove that he has before the particular occasion been in the habit of begging, nor that he intends in the future to follow the habit of begging. He may adopt the calling for one day only & may by his conduct on the particular occasion complained of so behave himself as to afford evidence, either by the nature of his request, the persistence or importunity of his manner, the whining tone adopted, or the deceptive devices employed, upon which a magistrate may be satisfied that the act is not merely an isolated act, but is such an act of begging, within the meaning of the statute, as to prove that he placed himself in a public place, etc., to beg or gather alms.—*MATHERS v. On appeal quarter sessions held C. had not been so guilty, but stated a case asking if, under the circumstances, she was guilty:—Held: it being a mere question of fact which quarter sessions themselves found in favour of C., there was no point of law on which a case could be stated.—

informed by the master that he could not go without them. Before leaving he told the master that he should send his children back, & on the evening of the same day the children returned alone to the workhouse & delivered to the master a letter written by resp. in which he gave an address about twenty-one miles away in another union & parish, & stated that he was sending his children back, that he was not running away, & would attend if his attendance was required. As the children were destitute they were re-admitted & became chargeable to the union. Justices having dismissed an information against resp. under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, for "running away & leaving his children chargeable to the parish":—Held: the question being a question of fact & the justices having found that there was no "running away" within Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, the ct. could not say that the justices were wrong in law in so holding.—*PALIN v. 1651. In place of public resort—Public highway—Intention to commit felony.—(1) Under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, a person is well convicted of being a rogue & vagabond, if the conviction state that he, "being a reputed thief, did frequent the public highway," at, etc., "with intent to commit felony." It is not essential to the offence that the highway should lead to any river, canal or navigable stream, dock or basin, quay, wharf or warehouse, or that it should be adjacent to any place of public resort, or avenue thereto.

1659. — Sufficiency of evidence.—A person may be convicted as a rogue & vagabond under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, on a charge of frequenting a public place for the purpose of committing a felony, without its being shown that he has been previously convicted, or that he has been a suspected person or reputed thief or has been known to have a bad character before the day on which the incidents take place which lead to his arrest.—HARTLEY v. ELLNOR (1917), 86 L. J. K. B. 938; 117 L. T. 304; 81 J. P. 201; 15 L. G. R. 775; 26 Cox, C. C. 10, D. C.

1660. On private property—For immoral purpose.—A man found trespassing in a private inclosure with a woman with intent to commit fornication is not liable to be convicted under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, the "unlawful purpose" there mentioned being not a merely immoral purpose but a purpose to commit some definite criminal offence.—HAYES v. STEVENSON (1860), 3 L. T. 296; 25 J. P. 39; 9 W. R. 53.

1661. — Felonious intent—Variation in conviction.—Where an information, laid under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, charged defts. with being in the prosecutor's dwelling-house "for an unlawful purpose, to wit, for the purpose of feloniously taking his provisions," & the justices found that defts. were there "for an unlawful purpose, to wit, for the purpose of taking his provisions without his consent":—Held: the conviction was bad.—KIRKIN v. JENKINS (1863), 2 New Rep. 64; 32 L. J. M. C. 140; 9 Jur. N. S. 1013.

— Arrest on different premises—On another charge.—Appls. met by design in a train going from London to Southampton, & having met a man named E. in the train they went with him to a hotel at Southampton & engaged two rooms under false names, & E. also engaged a room for himself, & a chambermaid subsequently found the three men in the room engaged by E., & she supplied them with drinks there. Appls., however, did not sleep at the hotel, but for the purpose of concealing their whereabouts they went to another hotel two miles away, where one of them paid for drinks with a £5 note, & appls. stayed the night at this other hotel. Next day a chambermaid found dice on the floor of the room engaged & occupied by E. at the first-named hotel, & appls. were arrested at Bournemouth, & a £5 note & 150 dollars in gold were found on one of them, & they were charged with stealing two 100 dollar bills & other money, the property of E. The money had not been handed over by E. in respect of gaming or other debts, nor was any such money due. Applt. on whom the money was found offered the detective £10 to square the matter. Whilst applts. were in custody on the above charge of felony an information was preferred against them under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4, charging them with being found on certain premises, namely, the first hotel above mentioned, for an unlawful purpose, & the justices convicted them under this sect., being of opinion that applts. travelled to Southampton & waited about the hotel for the purpose of coming into contact with passengers whom they knew to be leaving for America, & that their purpose in so doing was unlawfully to obtain goods or money from such passengers by fraud or theft:—Held: though actual arrest upon the premises is not necessary in order to constitute the offence of being found on the premises for an unlawful purpose, yet the conviction must be quashed, on the ground (1) (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.) originally applts. were not arrested & brought before the justices on suspicion of an offence under the sect.; (2) (BRAY & BANKES, JJ.) there was no evidence that applts. were discovered on the premises doing acts constituting an unlawful purpose.—MORAN v. JONES (1911), 104 L. T. 921; 75 J. P. 411; 27 T. L. R. 421; 22 Cox, C. C. 474, D. C.

1663. Examination in presence of prisoner—Proof of conviction—Committal for sentence.—Where prisoner is convicted at petty sessions as an incorrigible rogue & committed to quarter sessions for sentence, it is essential that the “examination into the circumstances of the case” required by Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 10, should take place in the presence & hearing of prisoner so committed to quarter sessions for sentence. The proper method of proving the conviction at petty sessions is to call a witness, who, with the certificate of conviction before him, can identify prisoner as the person referred to in such certificate.—*R. v. 1664. Form of conviction.—In a conviction under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, the omission of the word “part” in setting out the title of the Act is not a fatal variance, though sect. 17 gives a form of conviction requiring the title to be inserted. The form sets out that deft. was convicted for that he, etc., adding “here state the offence proved”:—Held: unnecessary to state whether the offence was proved by view, confession, or witnesses; though Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, gives the justice power to convict only on view, confession, or the oath of a witness. It is sufficient in such conviction to state that deft. wilfully refused, etc. to maintain his family, being able to do so, whereby A. N. his wife, whom he was bound to maintain, became chargeable, etc., without alleging more directly a refusal to maintain his wife.—NIXON v. NANNEX (1841), 1 Q. B. 747; 1 Gal. & Dav. 370; 10 L. J. 1669. Award invalid—Qualifying age not attained—Power of central authority to cancel.]—Appct. for an old age pension who had not in fact attained the age of seventy was awarded a pension by the local pension committee & was paid the pension. No appeal against the award was brought in the manner prescribed by the Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (c. 16). Afterwards new facts relating to the age of the pensioner came to the knowledge of the pension officer, who thereupon raised a question in the manner prescribed by Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (c. 16), to the effect that the pensioner was not entitled to the pension as she was not yet seventy. The local pension committee decided to continue the pension, & the pension officer appealed to the central pension authority, who deprived the pensioner of the pension:—Held: the original decision of the local pension committee was invalid, as appct. had not fulfilled the statutory condition as to age, & notwithstanding Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (c. 16), s. 7 (2), which enacts that "the decision of the local pension committee on any claim or question which is not referred to the central pension authority . . . shall be final & conclusive," it was competent for the pension officer to raise the question & for the central pension authority to deprive the pensioner of the pension on the ground of her real age.—MURPHY v. R., [1911] A. C. 401; 80 L. J. P. C. 121; 75 J. P. 417; 27 T. L. R. 453; 55 Sol. Jo. 518; 9 L. G. R. 675; sub nom. MURPHY v. A.-G. FOR IRELAND, 104 L. T. 788, H. L.

1670. Qualification by residence.]—The ct. does not think that this consultative case requires us to hazard a definition of "resident," but we are impressed by the contrast between this term & "absent" in Widows', Orphans' & Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, 1925 (c. 70), s. 22. The contrast is not between "absence" & "presence," but between "absence" & "residence,"

1671. False statements—By husband & wife—Information against both.]—One information may be preferred against husband & wife charging them with knowingly making a false representation contrary to the provisions of Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (c. 40), s. 9 (1).—MACPHAIL v. JONES, [1914] 3 K. B. 239; 83 L. J. K. B. 1185; 111 L. T. 547; 78 J. P. 367; 30 T. L. R. 542; 12 L. G. R. 1237; 24 Cox, C. C. 373, D. C.

1672. — Relevancy of.]—(1) By Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (c. 40), s. 9, "if for the purpose of obtaining or continuing an old age pension under this Act, either for himself or for any other person . . . any person knowingly makes any false statement or false representation" he commits an offence:—Held: an offence is committed only if the false statement is directly or indirectly relevant to the right to receive or continue to receive an old age pension.

(2) A person, for the purpose of continuing an old age pension for himself, made a statement to a pension officer that he had not been in the workhouse since he first received an old age pension & that he was not disqualified for receiving or continuing to receive an old age pension. He had in fact come out of the workhouse on the preceding day:—Held: the false statement was directly relevant to the right of the person to continue to receive an old age pension, inasmuch as Old Age Pensions Act, 1911 (c. 16), s. 6 (4), provides that the payment of a pension shall be discontinued where the disqualification has ceased less than three weeks before the time when the question is raised as to the disqualification of the person to receive an old age pension, & therefore he had committed an offence under Old Age Pensions Act, 1911 (c. 16).—*HOLDER v. ## SECT. 1.—POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), s. 33.

1. Corporate nature of office.—(1) The Postmaster-General is not liable in his official capacity, as head of the telegraph department of the Post Office, for wrongful acts done by his subordinates in carrying on the business of the department.

(2) It becomes of importance to see where this incorporation originated. It is found first in the Act of 1840 [3 & 4 Vict., c. 90] s. 67, not an Act incorporating, if that expression is allowable, or quasi-incorporating the Postmaster-General for all purposes, but merely constituting him a corp., or a quasi-corp., for the purpose of securing continuity of title. The Postmaster-General has vested in him property for the purpose of his position as Postmaster-General . . . & therefore, the sect. of the Act [3 & 4 Vict., c. 90, s. 67] was passed with a view to securing automatically the transmission of the right to property. That is the whole purpose of that sect. of the Act of Parliament, & the whole object of the quasi-incorporation of the Postmaster-General (MATHEW, L.J.).—*BAINBRIDGE v. 9. ——— Envelopes bearing halfpenny stamp—Right to open.]—Resp. sent a letter to his wife containing words alleged to be a libel on their children, plffs. This was inclosed in an open envelope, bearing a halfpenny stamp, addressed to her in her maiden name, & sent through the post. It was opened by the wife's butler out of curiosity, & he read the letter:—Held: (1) there was no evidence of publication to him by resp., as his act was unauthorised, & could not reasonably be anticipated by resp.; (2) although the postal authorities had the right to examine the contents of envelopes under a halfpenny stamp, a presumption that they had in fact done so did not arise, & evidence to show that they had done so in fact would be necessary to show publication to them.—*HUTH v. 16. Letter not returned—Delivery presumed.]—The ct. will make a vesting order under Trustee Act, 1893 (c. 53), s. 35 (1) (ii) (d), where the trustee does not appear on the petition, provided an affidavit is filed stating that the petition has been served on the trustee, & also that the request, in writing, addressed & sent to him in accordance Postmaster-General, who was considering improvements in the administration of his department, L. suggested that the system followed in France of collecting subscription to newspapers through postmasters be adopted in Canada, stating that he was leaving shortly for France on personal business & could look into the matter & report to him. Before leaving, to accredit him with the French postal authorities, he wrote to the Minister asking to be appointed special officer for the above purpose, who replied: "You are by these presents authorised to act as such special officer, etc." No mention was made of any payment or remuneration for such services:—Held: the special officer was not an officer or servant within R. S. C., 1906, s. 9.—LEFEVRE v. R., [1923] Exch. C. R.

PART III. SECT. 1.

1. Method of posting.]—Defts. contracted with an assoc. to transmit to every voter in British Columbia a certain circular of a political nature. They made up a number of parcels for various city centres & sent them by express, consigned to the express co.'s agents in the respective places, with instructions to mail in the local post offices. The local or drop letter postal rate of one cent on each letter was affixed:—Held: this procedure of reaching the addressees was an infringement of the rights of the Postmaster-General under the Post Office Act.—*R. v. 17. Transmission of obscene matter—Advertisement in newspaper.—Deft. inserted in a newspaper of which he was the editor advertisements which, though not obscene in themselves, related, as he knew, to the sale of obscene books & photographs. A police officer wrote to the addresses given in the advertisements, & received in return from the advertisers, who were foreigners resident abroad, obscene books & photographs. Deft. was tried on an indictment charging him with causing & procuring obscene books & photographs to be sold & published & to be sent by post contrary to the Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884 (c. 76), s. 4. Deft. was convicted:—Held: the conviction was right.—R. v. DE MARNY, [1907] 1 K. B. 388; 76 L. J. K. B. 210; 96 L. T. 159; 71 J. P. 14; 23 T. L. R. 221; 51 Sol. Jo. 146; 21 Cox, C. C. 371, C. C. ##### SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), ss. 14 & 34.

18. By common carrier—Letter relating to subject-matter carried.—A parcel, containing bank notes, stamps, & a letter, were sent by a common carrier from one stamp distributor to another. In an action against the carrier:—Held: the circumstance of the letter accompanying the stamps was prima facie evidence that it related to them, so as to bring the case within the proviso of 42 Geo. 3, c. 81, s. 6, & deft. not having proved the letter to relate to any other subject-matter, was liable for the value of the parcel.—*BENNETT v. 19. By delivery company—On behalf of shareholder—Business circular.—Applts. were a co. formed in London, called "The Circular Delivery Co., Ltd.," the purpose being "to deliver for or on behalf of its shareholders & members circulars, newspapers, etc." One J., who was a shareholder, delivered a business circular to the offices of the co., in an envelope, to be delivered according to its address, Messrs. Newell & Son, 5, Eccleston Street, N.W. The co. caused it to be delivered accordingly at its address:—Held: this was a violation of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 33.—CIRCULAR DELIVERY CO., LTD. v. CLARE (1869), 20 L. T. 701; 34 J. P. 5.

(c. 38); Post Office & Telegraph Act, 1920 (c. 40); & generally, RAILWAYS.

20. Right of Postmaster-General to control trains—Stopping places.—In a lease by a railway co. of their refreshment rooms at S. the co. covenanted with the lessee that all trains carrying passengers not being goods trains or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, & except trains not under the control of the co., which should pass the S. station either up or down, should, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accidents, stop there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes, & that as far as the co. could influence the same, trains not under their control should be induced to stop for the like purpose. The Postmaster-General having in the exercise of his power required that trains carrying mails should not stop at S. more than five minutes:—Held: (1) those trains were not, as regards stopping, under the control of the co.; (2) the co. were not by their covenant prohibited from carrying passengers by such trains.—PHILLIPS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1872), 7 Ch. App. 409; 41 L. J. Ch. 614; 26 L. T. 532; 20 W. R. 562, L. C. & L. JJ.

21. Whether passengers may use trains.—PHILLIPS v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO., No. 20, ante.

22. Security bond—Form of bond.—(1) Upon forfeiture of a bond to the Crown for conveyance of the mails by a railway co., a plea that the co. was prevented from performing their obligation by the neglect or default of a servant of the post office would be a good defence at law.

Accordingly, under Railways (Conveyance of Mails) Act, 1838 (c. 98), s. 13, a railway co. was ordered to execute a bond without any proviso protecting them against such an event.

(2) Form of bond to be given by railway cos. under that sect.—A.-G. v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. (1859), John. 28; 70 E. R. 326.

24. Injury to officer accompanying mails—Liability of railway company.—Declaration, in case, alleged that defts. were the proprietors of the L. & N. W. Ry. co. & of certain carriages, etc., used by them on the same; that the mails from L. to T., among others, had been required to be, & were, carried by defts. in & on the railway, pursuant to Railways (Conveyance of Mails) Act, 1838 (c. 98): that pltf. was an officer of the post office whom the Postmaster-General had reasonably required defts. to carry & convey in & upon the carriage conveying the mails, & defts. were then carrying & conveying pltf., as such officer, in a carriage of defts. on the railway, in which carriage the mails were, & pltf., then being such officer & as such officer, was lawfully in the carriage; & thereupon it became the duty of defts. to use proper care & skill in carrying & conveying pltf.: yet defts. did not use due & proper care & skill in carrying & conveying pltf., but neglected so to do; & took so little care, & so negligently & unskillfully conducted themselves in & about the carrying & conveying pltf., & in conducting, etc., the carriage in which he then was, & the engine & other carriages on the railway, that the carriage received

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO.* (1851), 16 Q. B. 984; 20 L. J. Q. B. 411; 17 L. T. O. S. 123; 15 Jur. 1053; 117 E. R. 1158.

25. Facilities for receipt & delivery—Duty to provide.]—Under Post Office (Parcels) Act, 1882 (c. 74), any railway co. named in sched. I. of the Act is bound to accept from & to deliver to the postal authorities receptacles containing postal packets at any station where such receptacles are tendered or applied for, notwithstanding that such receptacles contain postal packets which are ultimately destined for stations other than that at which such receptacles were first delivered. The same station may be both an “outwards” & an “inwards” station within Post Office (Parcels) Act, 1882 (c. 74), s. 3 (2), in relation to a postal parcel received at one station for sorting purposes, & forwarded again from the same station to its ultimate destination.—*R. v. 26. Remuneration—Apportionment meeting.]—HIGHLAND RY. CO. v. SMART (1895), 11 T. L. R. 305.

27. Remuneration—Ordinary trains.]—For the carriage of mails by the co.’s regular trains the payment by the Postmaster-General should be that which the co. could charge to ordinary traders for similar services, subject to such considerations as between two traders would justify a discrimination in favour of one over the other. Considering how large an element of cash is constituted by the terminal services, & taking into account the quantity & regularity of the traffic, I think that a reduction of one-third upon the parcels rates should be made in favour of the Postmaster-General. The carriage of mails by trains which the co. would not run for its own purposes at all must be treated differently. The co. is entitled to be paid for the cost of working these trains, & a reasonable profit on that cost, less the amount of receipts derived from the conveyance of other traffic carried (WRIGHT, J.).—WATERFORD, LIMERICK & WESTERN RY. CO. & POSTMASTER-GENERAL (1900), 17 T. L. R. 78; 11 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 77.

28. ———.]—Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid per annum by the Postmaster-General to the G. N. Ry. co. (Ireland) for the conveyance of mails on their railway:—Held: (1) to arrive at a “reasonable remuneration” to be paid for the conveyance of mail bags, the railway co.’s ordinary scale of rates as published in its time tables should be adopted, less 25 per cent. in respect of terminal services performed in the case of similar traffic for ordinary traders, but not performed in the case of mails, & less 10 per cent. in respect of the quantity & regularity of the mails & the facility & economy with which they are handled as compared with traders’ parcels. (2) In respect of “Notice” trains, i.e. statutory trains run compulsorily by the railway co., & absolutely under the control of the Postmaster-General, but carrying also ordinary passengers & parcels, the proper principle upon which the railway co.’s remuneration should be based was to ascertain the cost of running each train, to add (a) a fair & reasonable profit, & (b) an additional sum in consequence of the running of those trains fettering the co.’s freedom in the working of their system, & against the sum thus ascertained to credit the Postmaster-General with the annual earnings of each train, & where those earnings fell short of the sum of the three items on the debit side, the difference should be paid by the Postmaster-General.—GREAT NORTHERN RY. CO. (IRELAND) v. H.M.’s POSTMASTER-GENERAL (1909), 25 T. L. R. 511; 13 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 290.

29. ———.]—(1) Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid per annum by the Postmaster-General to the G. W. Ry. co. for the conveyance of mails on their railway, & for the services performed & accommodation provided by them in connection therewith:—Held: to arrive at a “reasonable remuneration” to be paid to the railway co. for the conveyance of mail bags, the railway co.’s ordinary scale of rates for parcels should be applied less certain deductions to counterbalance expenses incurred by the railway co. in carrying parcels for the public, & not incurred in case of the mails, viz. 25 per cent. for terminal services, & 10 per cent. on account of the substantial difference between mail bags & parcels in the quantity of the bags, & the regularity with which they are supplied for conveyance.

(2) The railway co. claimed to be paid full passenger fares for servants of the post office travelling in the sorting carriages. The Postmaster-General objected to make any payment for the space occupied by the sorters in the carriage, on the ground that as the carriages are paid for the sorters at work in them should travel free of charge:—Held: the railway co. should be paid for the conveyance of sorters & other servants of the post office at season ticket rates.

(3) The railway co. claimed to charge for “rent” for sites of letter boxes at stations, & for conveyance of mails by omnibus:—Held: such matters were outside the question of conveyance of mails by train; but charges were authorised for the use of the co.’s premises by the post office staff, & for assistance in transferring mails rendered by the servants of the railway co.—Re GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. & POSTMASTER-GENERAL (1903), 19 T. L. R. 636; 12 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 11.

Upon an application by the Postmaster-General to the comrs. for an injunction against the H. Ry. co. to compel them to carry the mails pursuant to Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (c. 48), s. 18, it was objected by the co. that the comrs. had no jurisdiction, as the complaint came within the arbn. clause, & should be determined according to Railways (Conveyance of Mails) Act, 1838 (c. 98):—Held: this was not a "difference" within the meaning of sect. 19, & the words therein, "any other question," should be confined, by the preceding particular words, to questions of remuneration, compensation & the like.—*POSTMASTER-GENERAL v. At the reference before the registrar & merchants, the Postmaster-General claimed against the fund in ct., as bailee for the senders of registered letters & parcels lost by the collision, the estimated value of the same, although he was under no liability to the owners of them:—Held: as bailee in possession, he could recover damages for the loss of the goods irrespective of whether or not he was liable to the bailors.—THE WINKFIELD, [1902] P. 42; 71 L. 42. Remuneration for carriage of mails—Principles of assessment.]—Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid by the Postmaster-General for the conveyance of mails by the appcts.' steamships between Dover & Calais it was agreed between the parties that the principle laid down in the case of the G. N. Ry. Co. (Ireland) v. H.M. Postmaster-General, No. 28, ante, should be followed, whereby the cost of service should be first ascertained to which should be added a reasonable sum for profit plus a further amount fixed according to circumstances for compulsory working; the difference between this total & the actual earnings to be the sum payable by the Postmaster-General.

In 1894 a contract had been made between the parties for the annual sum of £25,000, which included the carriage of the Indian mails, to which £2,000 odd was attributable, & as to which a separate contract was subsequently made.

The contract was terminated as from Oct. 1908, after which date the decision of the ct. as to payment was to be retrospective. From 1910 the service was a compulsory one ordered by "notice" by the Postmaster-General. The mails had increased from seventy-eight thousand bags per annum in 1894 to two hundred & thirty-eight thousand bags per annum at the time of the hearing, & the parcel post receptacles from 14,000 to 64,000 during the like period:—Held: from Oct. 1908, to Oct. 1910, the remuneration should be at the rate of £27,000 per annum; & from Oct. 1910, onwards, on which date the service had become compulsory, the remuneration for the services, to be performed in the future by turbine steamers, should be £30,000 per annum.

The basis for fixing the remuneration which was applied by the ct. in G. N. Railway Co. (Ireland) v. H.M. Postmaster-General, No. 28, ante, is not to be regarded as an inflexible principle binding under all circumstances.—*SOUTH-EASTERN & CHATHAM RY. CO.'S MANAGING COMMITTEE v. ### SECT. 1.—THEFT.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), ss. 50–69.

45. Theft of letter—What amounts to.—

(1) A person employed at a receiving house of the General Post Office, to clean boots, etc., & to assist in tying up the letter bag, is not a servant of the post office, within Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (c. 143), s. 2.

(2) A receiving house is not a post office within Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (c. 143), but it is "a place for the receipt of letters"; & the whole shop is to be considered as the "place for the receipt of letters," & not the mere letter box; & therefore, if a person take a letter & put it on the shop counter of the receiving house, or give it to one of the persons belonging to the shop there, that is putting the letter into the post.

In an indictment on Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (c. 143), it was alleged, that a letter was "to be delivered at T." The letter was addressed "T. house," which was a house in the parish of T.:—Held: sufficient.

(3) To constitute the offence of stealing a letter from a place for the receipt of letters under Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (c. 43), s. 3, it is essential that the letter should be carried out of the shop which was the place for the receipt of letters; &, therefore, if a person take a letter & steal its contents, without taking the letter out of the shop, that is not an offence within this sect. of the Act of Parliament.—R. v. PEARSON (1831), 4 C. & P. 572; 2 Man. & Ry. M. C. 520; subsequent proceedings, 5 C. & P. 121, C. C. R.

49. Theft of letter containing money—By postal servant.—A servant being sent with a letter, & a penny to prepay the postage at a receiving house, found the door shut; &, in consequence, put the penny inside the letter, & fastened it in by means of a pin, & then put the letter into the unpaid letter box. A messenger in the General Post Office stole this letter with the penny in it:—Held: he might be convicted of stealing a post letter containing money, although the money was not put into the letter for the purpose of being conveyed by means of it to the person to whom it was addressed.—R. v. MENCE (1841), Car. & M. 234.

50. — — — — ——A letter was brought by prosecutrix to a branch post office to be registered & posted. The postmistress being at the time busy, received the money, but laid aside the letter under a glass cover, saying that as soon as the business was over, she would complete the registration, & if prosecutrix would call again would give her a receipt. Letters were not usually put under the glass cover. In the interim, while the letter was under the glass cover, prisoner stole a bank note enclosed in the letter:—Held: a post letter.—*R. v. b. Revocation of authority to pay—Outbreak of war.—Where a person who had received a foreign postal money order presented such order for payment after hostilities had broken from C. to T. on the day in question, brought the sealed bag containing the letters from C. & delivered it safely at the post office of T. to the postmaster, whose duty it was to sort the letters in time to make up the bags for the mails. Prisoner's duty was complete when he delivered the bags to the postmaster of T., but after the performance of his duty he was requested by the postmaster of T. to assist in the sorting, which he consented to do, & whilst so engaged contrived to steal one of the letters containing a shilling. Prisoner was indicted for stealing a post letter containing money :—Held : prisoner was employed under the post office in sorting the letters within Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837 (c. 36), s. 26.

We entertain no manner of doubt that prisoner falls within the term of "employed under the Post Office." . . . He was employed by the postmaster, who was employed by the Postmaster-General (POLLOCK, C.B.).—R. v. REASON (1853), Dears. C. C. 226; 2 C. L. R. 120; 23 L. J. M. C. 11; 22 *L. T. O. Prisoner stole the letter & money :—Held : this was a stealing of a "post letter" containing money within Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837 (c. 36), s. 26; & this was not the less a "post letter" within that enactment, because it had a fictitious address.—*It. v. 53. — Not in course of transmission by post.]—A post office being at an inn, a person was sent to put a letter containing promissory notes into the post. He took it to the inn with money to prepay the postage; he did not put it into the letter box, but laid the letter, & the money upon it, upon a table in the passage of the inn, in which passage the letter box was, & he pointed out the letter to prisoner, who was a female servant at the inn, who said she would "give it to them." Prisoner, who was not authorised by the innkeeper, her master, to receive letters for him, stole the letter & its contents :—Held : this was not a "post letter" within the Post Office (Offences) Act, 1837 (c. 36), ss. 27, 28, & the stealing of the letter & its contents by prisoner was not an offence within either of those sects.—*It. v. 55. Theft of money.]—S. delivered two £5 notes to Mrs. D., the wife of the postmaster of C. at which post office money orders were not granted, & asked her to send them by G. the letter carrier from C. to W., in order that he might get two £5 money orders at the W. post office. Mrs. D. gave these instructions to G. & put the notes by his desire into his bag. G. afterwards took the notes out of the bag, & pretended when he got to the W. post office that he had lost them. It was found by the jury that G. had no intention to steal the notes when they were given to him by Mrs. D. :—Held : this taking of the notes by G. was not a larceny, the notes not being in his possession in the course of his duty as a post office servant.—*R. v. There was no evidence of any appointment:—Held: in an indictment under 2 Will. 4, c. 4, s. 1, for embezzling some of the pence thus received, this was evidence to go to the jury, that the pence were received by prisoner by virtue of his employment as a letter carrier.—*R. v. ## Part VI.—Legal Proceedings.

76. Preliminary examination of postal servant accused—By authorised travelling clerk.—Prisoner, who was an employee at a post office, was interviewed for some hours by a travelling clerk from the General Post Office, & after being cautioned, was questioned in connection with a criminal charge. The travelling clerk had power to initiate criminal proceedings, & he had prisoner practically in custody during the whole of the interview. Upon the trial questions & the statements in answer made by prisoner at the interview were tendered in evidence & objected to. The judge refused to admit the whole interview, but allowed the earlier part to be given in evidence.—R. v. KNIGHT (1905), 21 T. L. R. 310.

72 i. Detention of letter.—An action will lie against a postmaster for not sending a letter, but pltf. in his declaration must aver that the letter was his.—CAMPBELL v. McPHERSON (1840), 6 O. S. 34.—CAN.

Part VII.—Management of Post Offices.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), ss. 80, 81.

Early closing.—See Shops Act, 1912 (c. 3), s. 12, sched. III.

77. Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49)—Application to post office weights.—By sect. 25 of above Act, every person who uses or has in his possession for use for trade any scale which is false or unjust shall be liable to a fine; & by sect. 59 of above Act, where any scale is found in the possession of any person carrying on trade within above Act, or on the premises of any person which are used for trade, such person shall be deemed for the purposes of above Act, until the contrary is proved, to have such scale in his possession for use for trade. An information was laid, under sect. 25 of above Act, against the master of a post office, who also traded as a baker upon the same premises, for having in his possession for use for trade an unjust scale. The scale belonged to the Post Office, & was the property of the Crown:—Held: the justices had no jurisdiction to hear & determine the matter of the information because the provisions of above Act did not apply to scales, which were the property of the Crown.—*R. v. ## Part VIII.—Post Office Accounts.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), s. 41.

78. Moneys received on Post Office account—Deposited in bank—Priority of Postmaster-General—in winding up of bank.—Letter receivers were in the habit with the sanction of the Postmaster-General of paying moneys received on account of the Post Office into a bank to their private account, together with their own moneys, & of drawing cheques both for their own purposes, & for payment to the Post Office. The bank had notice that their customers were letter receivers & drew cheques for Post Office purposes. The bank having gone into liquidation:—Held: the Postmaster-General on behalf of the Crown was entitled to payment in priority over other creditors of the bank of the balance due upon the letter receiver's accounts in respect of Post Office moneys.—Re WEST LONDON COMMERCIAL BANK (1888), 38 Ch. D. 364; 57 L. J. Ch. 925; 59 L. T. 296; 4 T. L. R. 440.

Part IX.—Post Office Property.

See Post Office Act, 1908 (c. 48), ss. 45–49.

79. Vested in Postmaster-General.—BAINBRIDGE v. POSTMASTER-GENERAL, No. 1, ante.

80. Liability for rates—Houses leased for post offices.—Houses, the property of a subject, were taken on lease by the Postmaster-General, & occupied as a post office, for the purposes of the Post Office Revenue:—Held: the premises, being occupied by the servants of the Crown for public purposes, no one was ratable in respect of the occupation of them.—SMITH v. BIRMINGHAM UNION (1857), 7 E. & B. 483; 3 Jur. N. S. 769; 19 E. R. 1326; sub nom. R. v. SMITH, 20 L. J. C. 105; 29 L. T. O. S. 76; 21 J. P. 694; 5 V. R. 490.

81.—A statute gave power to Postmaster-General to purchase property, & enacted that the ratable value of land so purchased should be as at the date of purchase. He found part of the property was not needed, & let it to tenants:—Held: the property continued as before to be ratable only at the same amount.—St. GABRIEL, FENCHURCH, OVERSEERS v. WILLIAMS (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 649; 55 L. J. M. C. 14; 54 L. T. 270; 50 J. P. 533; 34 W. R. 256; 2 T. L. R. 138, D. C.

—Telegraphic wires & works.—See TELEGRAPHS & TELEPHONES.

82. Covenant for use as post office—Use for issue of excise licences—Whether breach.—By a lease in 1852, premises were demised to the Postmaster-General for one thousand years, at the rent of 1s., & the Postmaster-General covenanted that he & his successors would at all times during the term use the premises as a post office for the district, & would not use the premises for any other purpose. Ejectment having been brought on a proviso for re-entry for the breach of the above covenant, on the ground that the excise duties & licences for dogs, men servants, horses, etc., had been received & granted on the ### PART IX.

1. Injury to public—Whether Crown liable.—The Crown is under no legal duty or obligation to any one who goes to a post office building to post or get his letters, to repair or keep in a reasonably safe condition the walks & steps leading to such building.—REPROHON v. R. (1894), 4 Exch. C. R.

premises by the post office clerks :—Held : there had been no breach of the covenant.—WADHAM v. POSTMASTER-GENERAL (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 644 ; 40 L. J. Q. B. 310 ; 24 L. T. 545 ; 36 J. P. 148 ; 19 W. R. 1082.

Annotation :—Mentd. Harman v. Ainslie (1903), 72 L. J. K. B. 533.

83. Money found in post office—Property of Postmaster-General.—Suspicion being entertained against a letter carrier in the employ of the General Post Office, an assistant inspector wrote a letter, &, having inclosed in it a marked sovereign, sealed the letter, & took an opportunity, while the carrier's back was turned, to place it among a number of letters which he was engaged in sorting. The marked sovereign was afterwards found in the letter carrier's pocket. The sovereign was one of those which are occasionally found on the floor of the post office, having dropped out of letters, & which are carried to a fund, which is under the direction of the Postmaster-General. The letter carrier being indicted for stealing a post letter containing a sovereign, & also for stealing a sovereign the property of the Postmaster-General :—Held : he could not be convicted under the circumstances, of the more serious offence of stealing a post letter containing money, but might be convicted of the simple larceny of the sovereign.

The sovereign is correctly described in the indictment, as the sovereign of the Postmaster-General—it was his sovereign against all the world except the owner of it (PARKE, B.).—R. v. RATHBONE (1841), Car. & M. 221 ; 2 Mood. C. C. 242.

Part I.—Definition and Classification.

SECT. 1.—DEFINITION.

1. Power of disposition over property not one's own—Given by donor directing mode of exercise.]—(1) An instrument exercising a special or general power of appointment over property must be executed & construed according to the rules for the time being applicable to instruments of that kind, although the power may have been created before, but exercised after, an alteration in the law as to the construction & mode of execution of such instruments.

(2) The word “devise” in Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), includes in general a devise by way of appointment under a special or general power: consequently, where testator makes a will operating as an exercise of a special or general power, a devise of real estate by way of appointment which fails or is void, falls, under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 25, into the residuary devise, if any, by way of appointment, unless a contrary intention appears by the will.

(3) A power of appointment is a power of disposition given to a person over property not his own by some one who directs the mode in which that power shall be exercised by a particular instrument (JESSEL, M.R.).—FREME v. CLEMENT (1881), 18 Ch. D. 499; 50 L. J. Ch. 801; 44 L. T. 399; 30 W. R. 1.

SECT. 2.—CLASSIFICATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—COMMON LAW POWER.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 1 (7).

3. Effect as passing legal estate.]—(1) An appointment under a common law power, or a power operating under Statute of Uses, 1535 (c. 10), by which the legal estate has passed, is at most voidable, & a purchaser for value with the legal estate & without notice is not affected by the fraudulent execution of the power.

(2) An appointment in fraud of an equitable power, not operating so as to pass the legal estate or interest, is void, & a purchaser for value without notice can only rely on such equitable defences as are open to purchasers without the legal title who are subsequent in time against prior equitable titles.—CLOUTTE v. STOREY, [1911] 1 Ch. 18; 80 L. J. Ch. 193; 103 L. T. 617, C. A.

Annotation:—Generally, Mentd. Thompson v. Thompson, [1923] 2 Ch. 205.

SUB-SECT. 2.—EQUITABLE POWER.

4. Effect as passing legal estate.]—Testator devised real estate to his nine children nominatim as tenants in common, giving a power to three of them to sell the whole to avoid the difficulties of partition. W., one of the three, conducted certain sales under the power, retained more than his share of the purchase-moneys, & went into liquidation. Further sales were effected & out of the proceeds a further sum was paid to W.'s trustees in liquidation in respect of, & in excess of, his share.

There is an unquestionable power to sell . . . a power to sell in order to avoid the difficulties of partition. Testator contemplated that each individual might sell his undivided share. Then the purchaser of that undivided share might require to have a partition & in order to avoid all the expense & difficulty of partition testator gave this power . . . according to which the trustees might sell this estate & equity would compel the persons in whom the legal estate was vested to convey according to the trustees' contract (KAY, J.)—Re BROWN, DIXON v. BROWN (1886), 32 Ch. D. 597; 55 L. J. Ch. 556; 54 L. T. 789.

6. Effect as passing legal estate.]—CLOUTTE v. STOREY, No. 3, ante.

SUB-SECT. 4.—POWERS APPENDANT, COLLATERAL OR IN GROSS.

7. Powers appendant or appurtenant—Donee with interest in property.—Interest capable of being affected by exercise of power.]—Powers to raise estates are either simply collateral (as where a party that has such power has not, nor ever had any estate in the land, as where such power is reserved to a stranger, & there it cannot be destroyed by such stranger, because it is no more than a bare nomination), or not simply collateral; & these latter are of two sorts:—(a) appendant & annexed to the estate, (b) in gross. A power of the first sort is, where tenant for life has a power to make leases for one & twenty years or three lives; such a power is not simply collateral; for if such a tenant charge the land with a rent, & then execute his power, the charge shall not be defeated whilst he lives. So if he had before covenanted to stand seised to the use of another; because the power in that case is annexed to the estate. But where the power does not fall within the estate, as here the tenant for life has a power to make an estate, which is not to begin till after his own estate determined, such power is not appendant or annexed to the land, but is a power in gross, because the estate for life has no concern in it (HALE, C.B.).—EDWARDS v. SLEATER (1665), Hard. 410; 145 E. R. 522.

Annotations:—Consd. West v. Berney (1819), 1 Russ. & M. 431. Refd. King v. Melling (1672), 3 Keb. 52; Walmesly v. Butterworth (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 253. Mentd. Neale v. Mackenzie (1836), 1 M. & W. 747.

8. —————.]—The operations of fines & recoveries is the same upon trust estates as upon legal estates; & if so, it must inevitably follow, that an estate for life limited to the wife, & the remainder limited to her own right heirs in default of any appointment made by her last will, are both disposed of by the fine. If no such remainder had been limited by it, as the estate was the wife's own, & moved originally from her, whatever was not conveyed would have remained in her, & consequently been barred. This answers the objection of it being a naked power or power in gross & so not barred by the fine; for how can that be called a naked power which is to operate & take effect on the party's own estate? (LORD TALBOT, C.).—PENNE v. PEACOCK (1734), Cas. temp. Talb. 41; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 136; 25 E. R. 652.

Annotation:—Refd. Parkes v. White (1805), 11 Ves. 209.

9. —————.]—By a settlement made on the marriage of a lady then, & therein described as, "an infant of the age of nineteen years & upwards," it was agreed that, after the marriage, as soon as the case would admit, certain personal estate standing in the names of the trustees of her father's will in which the lady would take a vested interest on her marriage subject to an annuity for her mother's life, should be assigned to trustees, in trust for investment with the consent of the husband & wife, & to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, & after her death to her husband till bkpcy. or alienation; & then to hold the capital on trusts for the issue of the marriage; & in default of such issue, in trust for such person or persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint. The wife appointed the fund by deed to her husband, & died without issue, being still an infant. An action having been brought by the trustee in the husband's bkpcy., who was also the legal personal representative of the wife, against the next of kin of the wife, claiming the property.

The first power, a power simply collateral, I understand to be a power given to a person who has no interest whatever in the property over which the power is given. The second power, a power in gross, is a power given to a person who has an interest in the property over which the power extends, but such an interest as cannot be affected by the exercise of the power. . . . The third kind of power is a power exercisable by a person who has an interest in the property, which interest is capable of being affected diminished or disposed of to some extent by the exercise of the power. That power is commonly called a power appendant or appurtenant (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re D'ANGIBAU, ANDREWS v. ANDREWS (1879), 15 Ch. D. 228; 49 L. J. Ch. 182; 41 L. T. 645; 28 W. 10. Powers in gross—Donee with interest in property.—Interest not affected by exercise of power.]—EDWARDS v. SLEATER, No. 7, ante.

11. —————.]—By a marriage settlement made in 1832 certain estates were limited to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of trustees for a term of six hundred years to, secure £20,000, as portions for younger children, remainder to B., the eldest son of A., in tail male, with remainder over. The settlement contained a power for A. by deed & will to appoint a further sum of £10,000 as portions for younger children. In 1854 B. executed a disentailing deed, in which A. joined as protector of the settlement, by which the estates were granted, subject to the several uses, estates, & charges created by the settlement anterior to the limitations in favour of B.'s estate tail, & to all powers & privileges to such precedent estates annexed, to such uses as A. & B. might jointly appoint. A. & B. in exercise of such power created mtges. on the estates, & entered into the usual covenants for title, with an indemnity (inter alia) against portions. A. by his will charged the estates with a further sum of £10,000 for portions, & died in 1896. In 1909 questions arose as to the priorities of the mtges. created by the joint power, & the further portions appointed by A.'s will:—Held: (1) A.'s power to raise portions related to the estate of the donee in the land in gross, & was therefore capable of being released in 1854; (2) it was a power "belonging or annexed or exercisable in respect of" a precedent estate, & was not released by A.'s concurrence in the disentailing deed; (3) A.'s covenants for title in the mtges. did not amount to a release by him of his power, & therefore the portions appointed by the will had priority over the mtges.—NORTIDGE v. DERING, RABAN v. DERING, [1909] 2 Ch. 647; 79 L. J. Ch. 65; 101 L. T. 491; on appeal, [1910] 1 Ch. 297.

13. — — — — —.]—Powers . . . are of three kinds, appendant, in gross, or simply collateral. ## Part II.—Creation of Powers.

14. Technical words not necessary.]—A. on his marriage, conveys his land to a trustee to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to A. in fee. Proviso that in default of issue of the marriage, the trustee shall convey to such uses as the survivor should appoint. Although the husband devises the land & dies first without issue, yet the wife has a good power of disposing of the estate by her appointment.—OXFORD (Bp.) v. LEIGHTON (1700), 2 Ver. 376; 23 E. R. 837.

15. — — — — —.]—Disposition by donor only consistent with intention to create power.]—A remote reversion in real estates & lands to be purchased & settled will pass by general words in a will; as “all & every other my lands, tenements, & hereditaments”; though the uses are immediate. But, the purchase being postponed to the death of the deviser, the reversion in the estates to be purchased & settled to the same uses, subsequent to his death, not being an interest vested in him, did not pass; & though upon the settlement a power of appointment was implied, the will, particularly executing express powers, did not amount to an execution of that implied power.—A.-G. v. MICHELL (1855), 3 Eq. Rep. 1014; 24 L. J. Ch. 722; 25 L. T. O. S. 232; 1 Jur. N. S. 488; 3 W. R. 435; subsequent proceedings (1857), 5 W. R. 834.

17. — — — — —.]—B. in pursuance of a covenant made & entered into by him on his wife's marriage, devised certain freehold & leasehold property for life to trustees to the use of W. until bkpcy.; remainder to the use of the trustees during the joint lives of himself & wife; remainder to the use of E., his wife, for life; remainder to the use of all the children as tenants in common in fee, with benefit of survivorship in the event of any child dying under twenty-one & without issue, & in case all such children but one should die without issue, to remaining child his heirs, & assigns for ever, & in case every child born or to be born, should die under twenty-one without issue, to heirs & assigns of E., the wife, as if she had died sole & unmarried. All the children of E. having died in testator's lifetime without issue, one of whom only attained the age of twenty-one years, shortly after testator's death, W. filed a petition of insolvency, & was adjudicated bkpt. The estate accordingly vested in trustees for W. & wife, for their joint lives. The deed, acknowledged by E. under Fines & Recoveries Act, 1833 (c. 74), conveyed all the estate devised by testator to trustees in trust, as she, E., should by deed or will appoint. In pursuance of such power, E. appointed & devised all her estate to deft. for his own absolute use & benefit. Pltf., the heir-at-law both to testator & to E., claimed the property on the ground that the ultimate limitation “to heirs & assigns of E. as if she had died sole & unmarried,” did not take effect; & that it coalesced with the life estate by virtue of the rule in Shelley's case:—Held: (1) the devise over did not take effect by reason of the death of the child in testator's lifetime, & the foundation for the ultimate devise therefore failed; (2) in case there were no children to take the implied devise over would be a contingent remainder & capable of uniting with the previous life estate; (3) the words “heirs & assigns” did not confer a power of appointment upon E.—BROOKMAN v. SMITH (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 291; 40 L. J. Ex. 161; 24 L. T. 625; 19 W. R. 1029; affd. (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 271, Ex. Ch.

years if they should so long live, with an ultimate devise on the death of the survivor upon trust to & for the use of the heirs & assigns of the survivor of the four sons:—Held: the word “assigns” could not be construed as giving a power of appointment to the survivor; the limitation to the heirs & assigns of the survivor must be construed as a limitation to the heirs of the survivor & their assigns, & upon the death of the survivor his heir-at-law was entitled to recover possession of the property from a purchaser to whom the survivor had conveyed it in his lifetime.—MILMAN v. LANE, [1901] 2 K. B. 745; 70 L. J. K. B. 731; 85 L. T. 180; 49 W. R. 545; 17 T. L. R. 542, C. A.

Implied from recital in codicil.—Held: from the recitals contained in a codicil, a power to appoint was thereby given, although the words used by testator were those only of substantive bequest.—HOPKINSON v. PHIPPS (1838), 7 L. J. Ch. 255; 2 Jur. 639.

20. —.]—Testator by his will directed his trustees to purchase a sum of bank annuities upon trust to pay the dividends to his son J. for life with a proviso against alienation, & he then provided that in case his son should marry with the consent of his trustees, the annuities should, subject to the life interest of his son, be settled for the benefit of any woman with whom his son should intermarry & the issue of such marriage in such manner as should be agreed upon with the concurrence of his trustees & subject to the trusts to be declared in any settlement to be made on the marriage of his son or in case none should be declared, then the annuities should go as his son should by will appoint, & testator also provided that in case his son should die unmarried, or having been married without leaving issue, & without having exercised the power of appointment thereby given to him, then a moiety of the annuities should go to persons named in the will; the son died without ever having been married, & having by his will appointed a portion of the annuities to two of his brothers:—Held: sustaining this appointment, in the events which happened, the son had a power of appointment over the annuities.—SHEFFIELD v. COVENTRY (EARL) (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 551; 22 L. J. Ch. 498; 20 L. T. O. S. 193; 17 Jur. 289; 42 E. R. 987, L. C. & L. J.

21. — General scheme contrary to existence of power.—A marriage settlement dealing with real estate belonging to the wife provided that, should she survive her husband, which happened, the trustees should reconvey the lands to her “her heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns respectively for her & their own use & benefit, or otherwise as she shall direct”:—Held: these words did not necessarily confer a general power of appointment on the wife; it appearing that such a power would defeat the whole scheme of the deed.—VAN GRUTTEN v. FOXWELL (1901), 84 L. T. 545, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN (1900), 44 Sol. Jo. 377, C. A.

Part III.—Construction of Powers.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

22. Bare powers—Construed strictly.—(1) Devise of £30,000 to testator's wife for life, & afterward to be distributed among his children, as she by deed, will, or instrument in nature of a will, should appoint. She, having married again, appoints by will (inter alia) unto two of the children who died in her lifetime:—Held: their representatives were not entitled; & the shares so appointed to them lapsed, & fell into the residue.

(2) Cts. of law & of equity will equally transpose words in instruments to make the limitations intelligible, & attain the party's clear intent; but never to defeat the interests given or let in more than expressed.

(3) Appointee under a power must claim not only under the power, but according to the nature of the instrument under which it is executed.

(4) If an instrument is to operate as a will for the execution of a power, it must have all the incident consequences of a will. In the case of a will to pass lands by virtue of a power, it must be executed according to the provisions of the Stat. Frauds; & so in the case of a testament to pass personalty under a power; it must be such an instrument as is capable in its own nature of passing personal estate.

(5) When the execution of a power is by will, & is not expressed in the precise words which would be required in a deed, as under a clear intent to create an estate tail, though not formally worded, there the ct. will effectuate such intent, notwithstanding the appointee takes, in some sense, under the power.

(6) In like cases where, in any power, there is also one of revocation, & to appoint new uses, & the power itself is executed without any like reservation of a new power to revoke, the act, if substantive from the nature of the instrument, is irrevocable.

(7) Appointee under a power, takes under the authority of that power, as if therein mentioned nominalim, in so far as relates to the substance of the benefit; but he does not take as from the time when the power was created.

(8) Mere powers construed strictly. Powers coupled with an interest construed liberally.—MARLBOROUGH (DUKE) v. GODOLPHIN (LORD) (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 61; 28 E. R. 41, L. C.

SECT. 2.—VESTING OF PROPERTY.

25. Whether property vested in donee.]—By a marriage settlement it was declared & agreed between the parties, & the husband covenanted with the trustees, that in case the wife, or the husband in her right should at any time during his life become possessed of, interested in, or entitled to, any personal estate, moneys, effects or other property, in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy, by gift, bequest, or under Statute of Distribution, 1870 (c. 10), the husband & wife would, within six months, transfer, assure, assign, & make over all such property to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. Subsequently to the marriage, the father of the wife, by his will, vested a sum of £5,000 in trustees to hold the same upon such trusts as the wife should by deed or will appoint; & in default of such appointment, to pay the dividends & interest of the sum of £5,000 to the wife for her separate use, & after her death upon trust for her exors. or administrators:—Held: the covenant in the settlement did not affect or control the general power of appointment given to the wife over the £5,000 by her father's will.

As long as the power remains a power unexercised, so long it is a totally distinct thing from property (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—TOWNSHEND v. HARROWBY (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 553; 31 L. T. O. S. 33; 4 Jur. N. S. 353; 6 W. R. 413.

The wife's father, reciting that he wished to give her property without the obligation of having it settled, bequeathed a share of his estate, exceeding £5,500 in value, to such uses & on such trusts as she might appoint, & in default of appointment, in trust for her for life, for her separate use, with remainders over. The wife then executed eleven deeds, each appointing to her separate use £499 19s. 11d., four of the deeds being executed on one day, six on another, & one on another:—Held: the wife was entitled to the eleven sums of £499 19s. 11d. for her separate use, without any obligation to settle them.—BOWER v. 28. —.]—No two ideas can well be more distinct the one from the other than those of "property" & "power." . . . A "power" is an individual personal capacity of the donee of the power to do something. That it may result in property becoming vested in him is immaterial; the general nature of the power does not make it property. The power of a person to appoint an estate to himself is, in my judgment, no more his "property" than the power to write a book or to sing a song. The exercise of any one of those three powers may result in property, but in no sense which the law recognises are they "property." In one sense no doubt they may be called the "property" of the person in whom they are vested, because every special capacity of a person may be said to be his property; but they are not "property" within the meaning of that word as used in law (FRY, L.J.).—*Re ARMSTRONG, Ex p. By his will, made in 1884, the father of M. bequeathed to the trustees of the will a sum of £4,000 upon trust for such persons & purposes as M. should appoint in writing, & in default of or subject to any such appointment in trust for her sole & separate use, & testator declared it to be his intention that M. might be able, by exercising her power of appointment, to defeat the operation of the covenant contained in her marriage settlement for the settlement of her after-acquired property. Testator died in 1887. M. appointed that the sum of £4,000 should be held in trust for her separate use by nine separate appointments, made on separate days, & each under £500 in amount:—Held: the sum of £4,000 had been properly appointed by M., & was payable to her, & was not bound by her covenant to settle after-acquired property.—*Re GERARD (LORD), OLIPHANT v. 30. —.]—A covenant for settlement of after-acquired property extends to property which is limited to such purposes as the covenantor shall appoint, & in default of appointment to him or her absolutely. A marriage settlement contained a covenant that any property exceeding £200 in value which the wife should become possessed of or entitled to should be brought into settlement. Property, exceeding £200 in value, was subsequently bequeathed in trust for such purposes as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to her absolutely for her separate use. She executed deeds poll purporting to appoint out of the property several sums of £199 each to herself absolutely:—Held: notwithstanding the general power of appointment, the bequeathed property was bound by the covenant, & the deeds poll were therefore ineffectual.—*Re O'CONNELL, MAWLE v. 32. —.]—By a voluntary settlement dated Mar. 26, 1902, appct., a married woman, covenanted to settle all real & personal property to which she was then, or should at any time during her then present coverture become entitled for any estate or interest whatsoever in possession, reversion, remainder, contingency, or expectancy. There was no child of the marriage, which was dissolved on the wife's petition as from June 9, 1904, & the property of the wife comprised in her marriage settlement was ordered to be conveyed to her as if the husband had died in her lifetime.

In these circumstances questions arose whether the trustees of the voluntary settlement were entitled by virtue of the above-mentioned covenant to the following moneys, namely, a sum of £2,800 which became payable on Apr. 12, 1905, representing appct.'s fund settled by her marriage settlement, & at the date thereof neither ascertained nor payable, over which fund, in the event of there being no child of the marriage, appct. had a general power of appointment exercisable by deed while not under coverture, or by will, whether covert or sole, & to which fund in default of any such appointment she was absolutely entitled if she survived her husband: on Dec. 4, 1905, appct. had appointed the marriage settlement funds to herself absolutely:—Held: the determination of the question of title to the sum of £2,800 turned upon the distinction between power & property, & although the exercise of the power after the dissolution of her marriage created property, yet during the coverture all that appct. had was a power of appointment over the fund, & a power not being within the scope of the covenant, the sum of £2,800 belonged to her absolutely.—*TREMAINE v. She gave another share to B., the wife who was separated from her husband, for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil she revoked the bequest of this last share, & directed B. should have her share the same as A. to be at her own disposal, independent of her children, so that no part of it should be under trust, but to be "entirely at her own disposal, to give to any of her children who may be kind & dutiful to her":—Held: the wife, B., took an estate for her separate use during her life, & she had a general

M. by her will, after reciting the clause in her father's will giving the annuity, in exercise of the power thereby given, gave & devised "the annuity of thirty pounds" to her daughter T.:—Held: there was no uncertainty in the gift over; M. had a general power of appointment; & the annuity was a perpetual annuity charged upon the real estate.—*TOWNSEND v. 64. —.]—The property of a married woman, settled by an ante-nuptial settlement for her separate use for life, with remainder as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder in failure of appointment to her exors. or administrators, is an absolute settlement for her sole & separate use, without restraint on anticipation, & vests in equity the entire corpus in her for all purposes.

A., a widow & administratrix of her deceased husband, who had died intestate, & entitled to dower as to his real estate, & to a third of his personal estate, being about to contract a second marriage, executed with her intended husband a settlement, whereby she settled the estate she was so possessed of & entitled to, to her sole & separate use, with power of appointment by deed or will, & with his consent gave a letter instructing her bankers to keep separate accounts, & to consider any private overdraft by her on her own account secured by the administrative deposits in their hands. At this time two sums of £6,000 & £8,000 were in deposit on such account, & subsequently various other sums were, from time to time, paid in by her to the same account, & placed at interest with the bank, who allowed her to overdraw her private account on the strength of the arrangement so made. By her will she executed the power of appointment reserved to her by the settlement, & having at the time of her death overdrawn her private account to a considerable amount, the bankers claimed, as against the parties interested under the will, to retain the sums so paid into their hands, on account of the administrative account, & especially the sums of £6,000 & £8,000, so deposited with them, in payment of the sums due to them on account of the overdrafts made by her on her private account, & brought a suit to enforce such lien:—Held: whether or not the bankers had notice of the settlement (which fact was uncertain) the letter of instruction to them by A. was a valid execution of the right reserved by her, as regarded the two sums of £6,000 & £8,000 then in their hands, & in the absence of fraud gave the bankers a lien on those sums for any future overdraft that might be made in accordance with the terms of such letter.—*LONDON CHARTERED BANK OF AUSTRALIA v. The husband died in 1880. There was no issue of the marriage. The lady married again, after Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), & no settlement was made on that marriage. Upon a summons taken out by her & her second husband to have it determined whether she could release the power of appointment by will given to her by the settlement, & call for a transfer of the settled property:—Held: if the lady had come to the ct. immediately before her second marriage she would have been entitled to have the settled property transferred to her, & Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), had added the incident of separate use to her interest in such property, so that the lady & her husband were now entitled to have that property made over to them without any release by her of the power.—*RE ONSLOW, FLOWDEN v. 67. —[—(1) Testator, who died before 1882, by his will gave property to trustees upon trust to pay the income equally to two daughters for their respective lives for their separate use, & as to the capital declared that the same, being equally divided, should be subject to their respective appointments by will, & assigned & paid over accordingly, & in default of appointment to their exors., administrators, or assigns respectively. The trustees had some prior payments to make out of the capital. The two daughters married after 1882:—Held: on releasing their powers of appointment they were entitled to a declaration that they were entitled to their shares as absolute owners.

(2) The direction to pay to the exors., administrators, or assigns of the life tenant is, in such a connection, equivalent to a gift of the reversionary interest to the life tenant herself; & by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), the reversionary interest in such a case now coalesces with the life interest, while the testamentary power can be released.

(3) There is, however, no occasion for an express release of the power where the capital is actually paid over to the married woman, a sufficient release being implied from the circumstance.—Re DAVENPORT, TURNER v. KING, [1895] 1 Ch. 361; 64 L. J. Ch. 252; 71 L. T. 875; 43 W. R. 217; 13 R. 167.

mainder to heirs—Estate for life coalesces with remainder.—(1) By a will made in 1833 testatrix devised a freehold messuage unto trustees, their heirs & assigns, upon trust for her daughter during her life, & after her decease upon such trusts for the lawful child or children of the daughter as she should by deed or will appoint, & "in default of such appointment" in trust for her daughter's right heirs. Testatrix directed that the receipts of her daughter should be a discharge to the trustees, that the messuage should be enjoyed by her daughter free from the debts, control, or engagements of any husband with whom she might intermarry, & that the trustees might reimburse themselves. Testatrix authorised the trustees, their heirs or assigns, also to sell the messuage with the consent of her daughter "or other the persons or person who shall be beneficially interested under the trusts." The daughter after her mother's death granted the messuage to debts, in fee simple, & died without having been married. Pltf., her heir-at-law, having brought an action to recover the messuage:—Held: the messuage was devised to the trustees in fee simple at law; the limitation to the right heirs of the daughter in default of an appointment to her children was a remainder & not an executory devise; both the estate for life devised to the daughter & the remainder to her right heirs were equitable estates; consequently the estate for life & the remainder to the right heirs coalesced pursuant to the rule in Shelley's Case (1581), 1 Co. Rep. 93b, the daughter could make a valid disposition of the fee simple, & debts. were entitled to the messuage.

By a will made in 1806, testator devised lands to his son B. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent uses; & from & after the decease of B. "to the use of all & every the issue, child, or children of the body of B. lawfully to be begotten, in such shares & proportions, manner & form, as B. by deed or will shall limit, appoint, or devise the premises"; & "in default of such issue," to the use of other sons of testator & their heirs, as tenants in common:—Held: B. had power to appoint to his children in fee, & although there was no gift to the issue or children in default of appointment, they, under the terms of the will, took the same estate as B. had power to appoint to them, viz. an estate in fee; & therefore, the first taker, B., was entitled to an estate for life only, & not to an estate tail.—*BRADLEY v. Rep. 93b) did not apply, & under the limitations of the settlement Mrs. D. took an estate for life; the person who at her death answered the description of her heir-at-law took an estate for life, & there was a resulting trust in favour of Mrs. D. as settlor.—Re DAVISON'S SETTLEMENT, CATTERMOLE DAVISON v. #### C. Life Estate Severed from Power.

75. Tenant for life may take absolutely.]—Devise to one for life, & after to her issue, & if she has no issue, power to dispose thereof at her will & pleasure; the contingency of issue never happened:—Held: she took a fee.—GOODTITLE v. PEARSON v. OTWAY (1753), 2 Wils. 6; 95 E. R. 656.

76. ————]—Testator gave a real & personal estate in trust, for the separate use of his wife for life, with remainder to his children, & in case all his children died under twenty-one, then unto his wife, to will as she might think right. The children all died under twenty-one:—Held: the wife took an absolute interest, & not a life estate, with power of appointment by will.—LOMAS v. MATTHEWS (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 238.

77. ————]—A sum of stock was held in trust a lady for life, then for any husband for life, & after she should appoint to him, & subject in case of her children; & in default thereto, in such uses as she should appoint. The lady, at the age of sixty-eight, having never married, appointed the fund to herself & been owner of appointment in favour of herself & children:—Held: she was entitled her share of the capital.—MILES v. KNIGHT, [1877] L. J. Ch. 458; 12 L. T. O. S. 63.

78. ————]—Testator directed his property to be placed in the funds, & the income to be paid to his wife for her life. After her death he bequeathed two legacies of £6,000 & £1,000. The remainder of his property he left "at the disposal" of his wife, if she remained a widow. If she should marry, she was to have no control over his property, but the exors. were to pay her an annuity during her life; & the remainder of testator's property, after paying the above legacies, was to be divided among his nephews & nieces:—Held: the widow, who did not marry again, took the capital of the residue, subject to the legacies.—NOWLAN v. WALSH, NOWLAN v. WILDE (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 584; 17 L. T. O. S. 292; 64 E. R. 967.

SUB-SECT. 2.—SUPERADDED POWER OF USING CAPITAL.

80. Whether life interest enlarged to absolute interest.]—Testator bequeathed the residue to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to receive the annual produce during her life, & also to apply to her own use such parts of the capital as she should think proper, & after her decease to stand possessed thereof, upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, & in default, upon trust to pay certain legacies:—Held: the widow took a life estate only, with power of disposition of the capital during her life & of appointment by will, & not an absolute interest.—SCOTT v. JOSSELYN (1859), 26 Beav. 174; 28 L. J. Ch. 297; 32 L. J. O. S. 250; 5 Jur. N. S. 560; 53 E. R. 863.

81. ————]—Testator bequeathed the income of his residue to his widow for life, but desired "that in case anything should occur that her income is not sufficient, she shall be at liberty to go to the principal." He gave the residue to his brothers. The residue only produced £30 a year, & the widow claimed the whole capital:—Held: she was only entitled to so much of the capital as, with the income, would afford her a maintenance suitable to her station in life.—Re PEDROTTI'S WILL (1859), 27 Beav. 583; 29 L. & benefit, & subject as aforesaid gave her estate for certain charitable purposes. Testatrix died in 1910. Her husband did not marry again, & died, having by a deed poll appointed the corpus of testatrix's estate to himself & for his own absolute benefit:—Held: on the true construction of testatrix's will the husband had power in his lifetime to appoint the corpus of the whole estate to himself absolutely, & he became absolutely entitled under the joint effect of the will & deed poll.—*Re RYDER, BURTON v. She afterwards died intestate & unmarried:—Held: all her personal estate belonged to her next of kin; & no part of it could be considered as the specific personal estate of her father, or go to his brother's children.—*LIGHTBURN v. was settled upon testator's son D. for life with remainder for his children, with an ultimate remainder, in default of children, "upon the same trusts, both as to the capital & the income thereof, as are hereinbefore declared of the legacy of £10,000 hereinbefore bequeathed by me for the benefit of my daughter B. & her issue or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit." Testator's son D. died in 1894, without having had issue; & B. died in 1923, without having had issue, & having made certain testamentary dispositions. Thereupon questions arose; first, whether upon the true construction of testator's will, his daughter, B., had power to appoint a life interest in favour of her husband C. in the residuary estate of the testator, & secondly, whether, if she had that power, she had effectually exercised it. As regards the second question, it is sufficient to state that the ct. decided that question in the affirmative:—Held: upon the true construction of testator's will, notwithstanding that the bequest of the residue contained no reference in terms to any powers applicable to the settled legacy inasmuch as the power extended to an appointment of the whole income of the legacy & was not limited to an appointment of a definite sum, the effect of the referential words was to make the power of appointment in favour of a husband applicable to the residue as well as to the settled legacy; & such construction of the will did not offend the rule against a multiplication of charges; & accordingly, deft. C. was entitled to a life interest in the residuary estate of testator as well as in the settled legacy of £10,000.—Re ARNELL, Re EDWARDS, PRICKETT v. PRICKETT, [1924] 1 Ch. 473; 93 L. J. Ch. 276; 130 L. T. 700; 68 Sol. Jo. 367.

142. — [Whether accretion to original settlement or new settlement with referential trusts.]—By a marriage settlement, certain funds were settled upon certain usual trusts for the benefit of the husband & wife & their children, & it contained a hotchpot clause. By the will of the wife's mother, made subsequently, a portion of her personal estate was bequeathed to the trustees to pay & transfer the same to the trustees of the settlement, to be held by them upon & for the same trusts & purposes as were therein expressed concerning the property thereby settled. On a summons taken out by the trustees of the settlement to ascertain the effect of this bequest, it was contended by parties to whom but small appointments under the settlement had been made that the bequest was to be treated as an accretion to the settlement, so as to make the hotchpot clause applicable by bringing into account the funds already appointed under the settlement:—Held: inasmuch as there was no context in the will importing that the use of the words "same trusts" implied an accretion of the settlement trust funds, the bequest must be deemed to be of an independent fund, to which the hotchpot clause in the settlement was not applicable.—Re NORTH, MEATES v. BISHOP (1897), 76 L. T. 186.

143. — [By marriage arts. dated in 1845, certain funds were settled upon trust for the husband, A. for life, then for the wife C. for life, then for the children of the marriage as the husband should appoint, or in default of appointment by the husband as the wife should appoint. In 1876 A. died without having exercised his power of appointment except as to a specific portion of the funds appointed in trust for a daughter. In 1879 C. appointed that after her decease the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds for the time being subject to the trusts of the arts., other than the sum appointed by A., in trust for the remaining six children of the marriage in equal shares. In 1893 one of the sons, W., by his marriage settlement assigned to trustees his one-sixth share of the trust funds, which he specified in a schedule, to which he was entitled on the death of his mother, & all other, if any, his estate & interest of & in all other the trust funds for the time being, subject to the trusts of the arts. of 1845. By a codicil dated in 1878, Mrs. B. directed that the property which she had left by her will to A. should be transferred to the trustees of the marriage arts. & be held upon the trusts thereof, & she died in 1900. Subsequently, in 1900, C. appointed this property in trust for certain of her children, including W.:—Held: (1) the appointment of 1879 did not operate as an appointment of any moneys not then subject to the trusts of the marriage arts.; (2) W.'s marriage settlement passed only such estate as he then had in the trust funds; & therefore, his share of the property bequeathed by Mrs. B.'s codicil was not included in that settlement. (3) Semble: the effect of Mrs. B.'s bequest was not to make the property an accretion to the funds originally settled by the marriage arts., but to create a new referential settlement of such property upon similar trusts.—*Re WALPOLE'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT, THOMSON v. The settlement empowered B. by deed or will to appoint one-half of the income of the trust funds in favour of any husband of hers who might survive her during her widowhood. On the same day P. made his will & bequeathed the sum of £20,000 to the persons who at his death should be the trustees of the settlement "to be held upon the trusts," etc., in such settlement declared concerning the property thereby settled, & so that such trusts, etc., should "take effect in relation to the said sum of £20,000 in the same manner in all respects as if such sum had formed part of the property originally settled by such indenture." P.'s three other children were married, & at his death in 1917 he had several grandchildren. B. died in 1918, & by her will made in 1912, after reciting the settlement, appointed one-half of the income of "the trust fund thereby settled" to her husband during his widowhood. The husband claimed one-half of the income of the whole of the trust funds, including the £20,000, & two of the grandchildren, who had attained twenty-one, claimed immediate payment of their respective shares in one-half of the capital of the whole of the trust funds:—Held: the effect of P.'s will was to make the legacy of £20,000 an accretion to the funds originally settled by the

the ct. being inclined to treat the exercise of the special power as a condition upon which the operation, not

deed of 1910, & not to create a new independent referential settlement of the legacy upon the same trusts & power as in the original settlement declared, & therefore the husband was entitled under the appointment to one-half of the income of the whole of the trust funds, including the $20,000.—*Re PAUL'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, PAUL v. 145. — [1922] —.] — Testator devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell & convert the same & stand possessed of the residue upon trust for his sons equally. He directed his trustees to retain the share of each upon trust for the son for life, & after his death upon trust for his issue, as he should by deed or will appoint, & in default of appointment, equally, but with the proviso contained in a hotchpot clause. Testator empowered his sons by deed or will to appoint to their respective wives all or any part, not exceeding one-third part, of the income of their respective shares in his residuary estate. The gifts to the sons were expressly declared to be conditional on each of them on attaining the age of twenty-one assigning to the trustees of testator's will their interests under his marriage settlement "to be held upon the like trusts & with & subject to the like powers & provisions declared concerning the share for the same son," in testator's residuary estate. All the sons complied with this condition & assigned their interests. By a memorandum of direction & a deed poll the sons directed the trustees to hold the share of each of them in a sum which represented surplus income "as an addition to the capital" of their respective shares, & "so as to follow the destination thereof," & be subject to the same trusts, but with one exception. There were thus three trust funds, the residuary, the assigned, & the surplus income fund. In the exercise of the power of appointment one son appointed to his wife for life the income from his share of testator's residuary estate, & a second son made a similar appointment of one-third of the income of his share, "including in such share" the share under testator's marriage settlement which he had assigned to the trustees of the will:—Held: (1) the assigned & surplus income funds were not an accretion to testator's residuary estate, & therefore the appointment of a share in the income from the residuary fund did not carry with it the shares in the income of the two other funds; (2) the assignments, the memorandum of direction, & the deed poll were separate settlements of separate funds, with different settlors, & each must be treated as a separate settlement in which were written out the referential trusts therein referred to, & therefore the appointment by the second son of his share of the assigned funds was good, & there was no general hotchpot clause.—*Re CAMPBELL'S TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. 147. — [1922] —.]—By marriage arts. a reversionary interest in a fund was agreed to be settled on the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, & after the death of the survivor, on the issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor of the husband & wife, in equal shares if more than one, & if but one, then the whole to go to such only child; & if there should be no issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor of the husband & wife, then the fund was to go as the husband should appoint. The only child of the marriage died in the father's lifetime, leaving a child:—Held: the word issue was to be construed child, & therefore an appointment of the fund made by the father was valid.—*SWIFT v. Govt. securities. The daughter died unmarried. She had no four per cents. standing in her name, nor was there any property to satisfy the legacies, except the three per cents. standing in the names of the trustees of her father's will :—Held : the power was not confined to the daughter's children, but was general ; & her will was a due execution of it.—*MACKINLEY v. The daughter made a testamentary appointment under the general power in favour of her husband, reciting, as the fact was, that she had then no children. She afterwards had children, but died without revoking the appointment:—Held: (1) there was an implied gift to the objects of the first power in default of appointment; (2) if not, the appointment was conditional on there being no children, & they took as nearest of kin as in default of appointment.—

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

163. Exercise according to terms of power.—A particular affirmative power must be directly pursued (WILMOT, LORD COMMISSIONER).—CHURCHMAN v. HARVEY (1757), Amb. App. I, 824; 27 E. R. 519.

164. Condition precedent to exercise—Performance made non-obligatory or impossible—Whether power exercisable without performance.—When a thing is to be done, as a condition precedent to the exercise of a power, & then subsequent legislation removes the obligation to do the thing, or makes the doing it impossible, it does not follow that the power may be exercised without doing the thing.—SHREWSBURY (EARL) v. SCOTT (1860), 6 C. B. N. S. 221; 29 L. J. C. P. 190; 141 E. R. 437; sub nom. HOPE-SCOTT v. SHREWSBURY (EARL), 6 Jur. N. S. 472, Ex. Ch.

165. Exercise avoiding prior act of donee—

Bond to Crown binding lands subject to power.—A man possessed of an estate & of a power of appointment, cannot so exercise the power as to avoid his own act.

Where A. possessed a certain estate with such a power, & had given a bond to the Crown & afterwards exercised the power of appointment in favour of B.:—Held: such appointment was bad, & the bond bound all lands over which the obligor had a disposing power at the time of its execution.—ELLIS v. R. (1851), 6 Exch. 921; 20 L. J. Ex. 348; 15 Jur. 917; 155 E. R. 820; sub nom. R. v. ELLIS, 18 L. T. O. S. 7, Ex. Ch.

166. Evidence of exercise—Recital in deed of compromise.—By arts. made on her marriage, a power of appointment was reserved to A. A. survived her husband & married again. During her second marriage, A. & her husband executed a deed of compromise, which recited the execution of the power of appointment by A. in the lifetime of her first husband, & her subsequent destruction of the deed immediately after his death. The original draft of the appointment was found in the solr.'s office, & his bill of costs, which, however, contained no charge for attending the execution of the deed:—Held: though the deed of compromise would not affect her rights, yet, after the lapse of forty years, the recital was sufficient evidence of the execution of the power as against those claiming under A.'s will.—DYNE v. COSTO-BADIE (1853), 17 Beav. 140; 1 Eq. Rep. 116; 23 L. J. Ch. 66; 21 L. T. O. S. 135; 1 W. R. 315; 51 E. R. 986.

167. Exercise by will — Further exercise to correct omissions—Revocation of will.]—On the marriage of A. & B. in 1824, two estates belonging to B., the wife, were vested in trustees upon certain trusts in favour of A. & B. & the issue of the marriage, but by mistake no provision was made for the daughters of any son of the marriage, & as to one of the estates, no power of disposing of it was given to B. in case there should be no issue of the marriage. The blunder being discovered, A. & B., in 1825, under a general power of appointment given them by the settlement, paramount to the limitations therein, relimited the estates to the old uses, except as to the life estates to themselves & the survivor of them, which were omitted by a second mistake, & they supplied the omission in the original settlement. There being no issue, B., in 1827, made her will in pursuance of the power "reserved to her by the original settlement & every other power enabling her in that behalf." The second blunder being afterwards discovered, in 1840 A. & B., under the general power, appointed to the old uses, & supplied the second omission. This deed of appointment recited the intention of A. & B. to vary the limitations, but it was clear, in the opinion of the ct., that the sole intention & object of the appointment was merely to cure the second blunder:—Held: the will of B. was revoked.—WALKER v. ARMSTRONG (1856), 21 Beav. 284; 25 L. J. Ch. 402; 27 L. T. O. S. 10; 2 Jur. N. S. 221; 4 W. R. 280; 52 E. R. 868; on appeal, 8 De G. M. & G. 531, L. J. J.

168. Instrument creating power invalid.]—A married woman, who was entitled to an equitable estate in tail in copyholds, in Feb. 1870, executed a deed, acknowledged but not entered upon the ct. rolls of the manor within six months after execution, declaring that such copyholds should be held in trust for such persons as she & her husband should jointly appoint, & in default for herself in fee. In Mar. 1870, the married woman & her husband, purporting to exercise this joint power, by deed appointed the entailed copyholds, & covenanted to surrender those & other copyholds to which she was entitled in fee, to trustees upon trust to sell, invest the proceeds, & hold the fund for her separate use for life, than for her husband for life, & then for her children other than her eldest son. The married woman had several children, & after her death & that of her husband the trustee of the settlement petitioned that all the copyholds, which had not been sold or surrendered, might vest in him for all the estate therein of the eldest son & customary heir, who was an infant, & a vesting order was made according to the prayer of the petition:—Held: a disentailing assurance by an equitable tenant in tail of copyholds, which is not entered upon the ct. rolls of the manor within six months after execution, is void; & therefore the power of appointment which the deed of Feb. 1870, purported to create could not be exercised.—*GREEN v. 174. Right to delegate.—A. made his will & gave personalty to B., a married woman, for life, & after her death as she should appoint, & in default of appointment, to her husband; & if she should survive him & make no appointment, then to her children. B. had three children, & by her will she appointed, after her husband's death, £2,000 between two of her children, & £1,500 to the other, & she appointed the residue to her three children by name, in such manner as her husband should appoint by will. He by his will appointed £500 to one of the children; (£ ) to another, & the residue to the third:—Held: the husband had no power to exclude either of the children; his appointment was therefore bad; & the appointment of the wife took effect in favour of the three children.

It is not contended that [B.] had no power to delegate to her husband her power to appoint, & if it had been so contended, I should decide that the argument could not be sustained (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—WHITE v. WILSON (1852), 1 Drew. 298; 22 L. J. Ch. 62; 17 Jur. 15; 1 W. R. 47; 61 E. R. 466.

(5) Where there is a complete execution of a power, & something ex abundante added, which is improper, then the execution shall be good, & only the excess void; but where not a complete execution of a power, where the boundaries between the excess & execution are not distinguishable, it will be bad (CLARKE, M.R.).

185. —[—By his will made in 1889 E. A. G. devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust as to a particular share thereof to pay the income to his daughter for life, with power to her to appoint the income to her husband, & after her decease, & subject to any appointment to her husband, to hold the share & the income in trust for her children, or any of their issue in such manner as she should by deed or will appoint. The will contained an express provision enabling trustees to apply any part of the annual income of the share to which an infant might be entitled towards the maintenance, education, or benefit of such infant, but by a codicil to his will testator declared that the powers of maintenance should only apply to income to which the infant was, or if of full age would be, entitled. The daughter married & had three children, all infants, & resps. to the summons. By her will, made in 1908, after appointing a defeasible life interest in the settled share to her husband, she appointed the share, & the income thereof, to all her children who should attain twenty-five before the expiration of twenty-one years from her death, or should be living at the expiration of such period without having attained twenty-five with a proviso under which possible grandchildren might become entitled under the appointment to an interest in their parent's share, & she "empowered the trustees of the settled share" to apply the income of the expectant share of any child or grandchild for or towards his or her maintenance, education, or benefit. Testatrix & her husband having both died, upon a summons taken out by the trustees of the will of E. A. G. asking whether they had a discretionary power under either of the wills to apply the income of the shares to which the infant depts. were contingently entitled, for their maintenance, education, & benefit:—Held: the power contained in the appointment by the mother's will was an attempt to delegate to the trustees a personal discretion exercisable by the donee, & therefore wholly inoperative.—*Re GREENSLADE, GREENSLADE v. The daughter, in exercise of the power, by her will appointed the trust fund among all her children who should survive her & being male attain twenty-one or being female attain that age or marry under it; & she declared that during the period of twenty-one years from her death the income of each child's share should be paid to the child, & if the child should die within the period of twenty-one years the child should have a power of appointment by will, & subject thereto in the event of the child leaving issue in trust for such child absolutely, but in the event of the child leaving no issue then the share was to go by way of accruer to the other shares. If the child should survive the period of twenty-one years the child was to take absolutely; "provided always that the trustees," of testator's will, "shall, if & so far as I can authorise the same, have power from time to time or at any time during the period of twenty-one years in their absolute discretion to transfer & make over the share or shares for the time being of the appointed funds of any son of mine who shall have attained the age of twenty-one years or any part of such share or shares to such son for his own use absolutely":—Held: the power conferred upon the trustees by the proviso was an attempt to delegate the power given by testator to his daughter & was therefore an invalid exercise of that power.—*Re JOICEY, JOICEY v. He appointed the two trustees exors., & by a codicil appointed a third exor.; one alone proved the will, & the others renounced. In a state of facts brought into the master's office, the sole exor. & trustee stated that J. had conducted himself to his satisfaction, & in such a manner as to entitle him to an equal share:—Held: the sole exor. had power to appoint, & had well appointed a share to J.—*EATON v. Mrs. P., by deed not attested as to her signature, at the foot of which she had written, without date, directions for her burial, appointed the estates, after her decease, to her husband for life, & in default of children, to him in fee; & she revoked a prior deed of appointment. The estates were afterwards sold, & the proceeds invested in securities, but were never reinvested in lands, although their liability to be so was recognised by the parties. There was no issue of the marriage. Mrs. P. survived her husband, & applied part of the proceeds to her own use. At her death she was seised, exclusive of the settled property, of a mansion house, with outbuildings, gardens, & a small field adjoining it, & some cottages opposite to it, let to tenants, & was possessed of some personal estate, no part of which was in the name of a trustee. She devised the mansion house, with its appurtenances, & all other her real estates, to C. S., & bequeathed all her personal estate, whether in the name of herself or of any trustee, subject expressly to her debts & legacies, to other persons. After her death, the deed of appointment was found in her house, with the title deeds of the mansion house; but the revoked deed could not be found. Her debts & legacies greatly exceeded her assets:—Held: the former deed was not a testamentary instrument, & Mrs. P.'s receiving part of the proceeds of the settled estates was not an entry or claim within 54 Geo. 3, c. 168, but 54 Geo. 3, c. 168, remedied the defect of attestation.—HOUGHAM v. The husband of the donee died in 1819 & the donee in 1840. After the death of the donee of the power a writing was found in the form of a letter, & sealed on the outside only, purporting to bear date Aug. 20, 1816, & to be made in execution of the power, & concluding thus, "as witness my hand & seal" with a signature purporting to be that of the donee & two other names

The lady, by will, devised "the estate comprised in the said settlement," after her husband's death, to certain persons, & signed & sealed the will, which purported to be "signed & sealed" in the presence of "two witnesses":—Held: a will cannot be made without being published, it is not necessary to mention the word "published" in the attestation, & the power was validly executed.—*VINCENT v. 243. ————.]—Delivery is equivalent to publication of a will.

A married woman had power, under her marriage settlement, to appoint certain lands to uses by her last will & testament, "signed & published in the presence of, & attested by, three or more credible witnesses." The reversion in the same lands, subject to certain life estates, was also vested in her. She made a will, containing a devise of all her property real & personal but not referring to the power. The attestation stated the will to be signed, sealed, & delivered by testatrix in the presence of three witnesses, whose names were subscribed:—Held: (1) the will was a due execution of the power.

244. ————.]—Where an attestation clause is not required the mere circumstance that there is an attestation clause specifying certain things does not exclude evidence that other things were done besides those which are attested.

A married woman having power under her marriage settlement to dispose of personal estate by a will to be signed & published by her in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, made her will in pursuance of the power & signed her name at the foot of it. Then followed the signatures of three witnesses, & below those signatures was a memorandum in the handwriting of testatrix, to the effect that the will had been signed & sealed by her in the presence of the above three witnesses. Upon the examination of the witnesses after the death of testatrix two of them deposed to testatrix having signed the will in the presence of all the witnesses, but the third stated her belief that the will had been signed before the witnesses entered the room:—Held: (1) coupling the memorandum with the testimony of the witnesses there was sufficient evidence of signing in the presence of the witnesses, or two of them to satisfy the requisition of the power in that respect; (2) testatrix calling the witnesses to attest her will, sealing it, & declaring it to be her act, which circumstances were given in evidence, thereby published her will within the meaning of the power; (3) as no attestation clause was required by the power, the omission of any statement as to publication in the memorandum, considered as an attestation clause, was immaterial, therefore, under all the circumstances of the case that the will was a due execution of the power.

(4) Legacies of stock given by a married woman by her will, executed in pursuance of a power:—Held: notwithstanding the stock was misdescribed to be specific, & the costs of a suit instituted by the extrices, who were also the residuary legatees of testatrix for the purpose of having the trusts administered directed to be borne ratably by the specific legacies.—WARREN v. POSTLETHWAITE (1845), 2 Coll. 108; 14 L. J. Ch. 422; 5 L. T. O. S. 387; 9 Jur. 721; 63 E. R. 658.

If either before or since above Act, a power be created to appoint real estate by deed or will to

254. — Though not required in express terms.]—Settlor vested certain lands of which he was seised in fee simple, in three sets of trustees, upon certain trusts. The term vested in the first set was one of ninety-nine years, for securing a jointure of £200 per annum for wife of settlor; that vested in the second set was one of five hundred years, for raising £5,000; that vested in third set was one of six hundred years, for raising £2,000. The settlement also contained a clause enabling the settlor, his heirs or assigns, to release & discharge the premises from the payment of the annuity & sums of money, or any of them, by charging such annuity & such sums, or any of them, upon any other estate of competent value, with the consent & approbation of the respective trustees. Settlor, deft., by indentures of lease & release, expressed to be made between him & the three sets of trustees, conveyed to B., C. & their heirs certain premises to the uses, upon the trusts, etc., contained in the original settlement, to the intent that the premises conveyed by the latter indentures might be charged with the jointure, & the two sums of £5,000 & £2,000 in lieu of, & as a substitution for, such or so many of the premises contained in the settlement. These deeds of release & substitution were signed by the two trustees of the first term of ninety-nine years for securing the jointure, only by one of the trustees of the term of five hundred years, for securing £5,000; & they were signed by neither of the trustees of the term of six hundred years, for raising £2,000:—Held: (1) the power of substitution of new premises for those charged with the respective sums of £2,000, & £5,000, & of causing a cesser of the terms of five hundred & six hundred years, was not well executed, in as much as the deeds were signed only by one trustee of the one term, & by neither trustee of the other; the premises contained in the original settlement were only released, & those substituted were only burdened as to the term of ninety-nine years, for securing the jointure, the deed as to this term having been signed by the two trustees; (2) where the nature & object of the power, & the circumstances of the case, point to a previous consent, there such previous consent is necessary, although not required by the terms of the power.—GREENHAM v. GIBBESON (1834), 10 Bing. 363; 4 Moo. & S. 198; 3 L. J. C. P. 128; 131 E. R. 944; previous proceedings (1832), 2 L. J. Ch. 36, L. C. Annotation:—Generally, Mentd. Gilbey v. 255. — Consent to be by deed—Parol consent followed by deed.]—A settlement contained a power which was to be executed by A., with the consent of B., "such consent to be signified by some deed to be duly executed by him, & not otherwise," to release certain estates from charges in favour of the younger children of A., & substitute others in their stead. The donee of the power executed it by deed, which was not, however, executed by B. till nine months after its execution by A., but evidence was produced that a draft of the deed, purporting to be an execution of the power by A., had been shown to B. before it was executed by A., & that B. had then given his parol consent thereto:—Held: the power had been validly executed.—OFFEN v. HARMAN (1859), 1 De G. F. & J. 253; 29 L. J. Ch. 307; 1 L. T. 315; 6 Jur. N. S. 487; 8 W. R. 129; 45 E. R. 355, L. JJ.

256. — Consent of trustees.]—Under a settlement, a general power of appointment over the settlement funds was, in the events which happened, conferred upon C., the tenant for life, who at the date of the settlement was a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition. The power was to be exercised with the consent & concurrence of the settlement trustees, not being less than three, or of a majority of three of four trustees. C. having recovered & being no longer subject to lunacy jurisdiction, subsequently, in Apr. 1918, by deed made between himself of the one part & three of the four settlement trustees of the other part, with the consent & concurrence of the three trustees parties thereto testified by their execution of those presents, appointed that the settlement trustees should after his death stand possessed of the trust funds in trust for such person or persons & purposes as he should by will or codicil appoint. By a subsequent codicil referring to the power contained in the deed of Apr. 1918, C. appointed that the settlement trustees should pay & transfer the settlement funds as therein mentioned:—Held: on the true construction of the power, the trustees were not required to approve of the persons who were to benefit under the exercise of the power or of the extent to which they were to benefit, but the exercise of the power was merely made conditional upon the consent & concurrence therein of the trustees; & the deed of Apr. 1918, was a valid exercise of the power.—Re DILKE, Re DILKE'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, VEREY v. (2) A written order, directed to the trustees of the fund, would be a good exercise of this power.

(3) If the donee of the power was also the sole trustee of the fund a cheque upon a banker where the fund was lying would be a good appointment, if he had no money of his own there.

(4) So, also, would a letter from him referring to the power or to the property, & accompanying a gift of money, which it stated to be in pursuance of the power or out of the property.

(5) In the case of a series of appointments of this kind one letter stated only that the payment which it accompanied was made “in fulfilment of the known wishes” of the donor of the power:—Held: this was an ambiguity that might be explained by reference to other documents which showed that the gift was intended to be in exercise of the power.—BRODRICK v. The appointor afterwards made her will, which was duly executed & attested according to the above Act, & thereby bequeathed part of the trust funds:—Held: the will was a writing within the terms of the power.

(2) The mere fact that a party, having a power by deed to revoke & make a new appointment of trust funds, has attempted to make such revocation & new appointment by will, owing to her having forgotten the restrictions of the power, & being at the time unable to procure the deeds, is not a ground upon which equity will supply the formal execution required by the terms of the power, or give to the will the effect of a deed, or convert the trustees of the property into trustees for the persons who would be appointees if the will were a good execution of the power.—*BUCKELL v. 289. ————]—Where a power of appointment is to be exercised by a writing under the hand & seal of the donee, it cannot be exercised by a will executed with only the formalities required by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), because the essential requisition of the power is, that it should be exercised under hand & seal, & the statute applies to a power of which the essential requisition is, that it should be exercised by will, & the formalities are comparatively unimportant.

The reason that such a power would have been held duly exercised before the new Wills Act by a will under hand & seal was, because, under the general word "writing," it was indifferent by what kind of instrument the power was exercised, provided the essential solemnities were complied with.—WEST v. RAY (1854), Kay, 385; 2 Eq. Rep. 431; 23 L. J. Ch. 447; 23 L. T. O. S. 9; 2 W. R. 319; 69 E. R. 163.

She signed a written document which was expressed to be her "last will," & which, if valid as a testamentary instrument, would have operated as an execution of the power. This document, having been insufficiently executed, was not admitted to probate:—Held: although the document might not be "in the nature of" a will, yet, as it clearly "purported to be" the will of the donee of the power it was a valid execution of the power.—*Re BROAD, SMITH v. She subsequently signed a document by which she did not in terms revoke any of the provisions of the settlement, but purported to make certain dispositions of (inter alia) the property the subject of the settlement in testamentary form. This document was signed by her in the presence of two credible witnesses, but, inasmuch as her signature was not placed at the foot or end thereof, it could not be admitted to probate as a will. The question now raised was whether the document operated as an exercise of the power of appointment:—Held: the document was a "writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power" & by above Act, s. 1, a "will" within above Act; it was therefore an "appointment made by will" within the first sentence of above Act, s. 10, & inasmuch as it was not executed as a will in accordance with above Act, s. 9, it was invalid as an execution of the power.—*Re BARNETT, DAWES v. Testator by his will gave all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell & convert & to invest the proceeds in certain investments which did not include mtgs. of leaseholds, & he directed them to pay the income of the trust estate to his wife for life, & after her death to hold the trust estate upon trust for such of his nine children as his wife should by will or codicil appoint, & in default of appointment upon trust to divide the same among his nine children in equal shares. Testator's widow by her will, in exercise of the power given her by testator's will, appointed certain sums to her daughters in respect of their one-ninth shares, & declared that the trustees of testator's will might invest the moneys subject to the trusts of that will in certain securities which were not within the range of investments thereby

By a codicil to her will the widow, in further exercise of the power, declared that the trustees of testator's will should hold two of the one-ninth shares of the trust estate upon trusts in favour of certain objects of the power, & subject to a slight modification in the amounts of the sums appointed by her will, made by a second codicil, she allowed the bulk of the trust estate to pass under testator's will in default of appointment. L. & his wife. L. W. married under age without the consent of trustees, & had issue. After the death of her first husband she, being then of full age, married again, & then appointed the rentcharge after her death to her eldest son by her first husband:—Held: the power of appointment of the rentcharge devised as above, vested in her; & being well exercised conferred a valid title upon the appointee.—*BEAUMONT v. During the joint lives of the parties A. made a will whereby, after certain bequests, he gave all the real estate & residue of the personal estate of or to which he was or should at his decease be possessed or entitled, or have power to dispose of by will to his wife; but in case, which happened, she should die in his lifetime then upon trust for his son for life, remainder for testator's grandson, an infant; & if his grandson should die under twenty-one without issue, then for a stranger to the power, with executory devises over. Upon the question being raised as to whether the will operated as a valid exercise of the power of appointment contained in the settlement:—Held: the power being special & given to the survivor of two persons, was not well exercised by a will made during the lives of both the persons by that individual who afterwards proved to be the survivor; & even had testator at the date of his will been actually survivor, the words of the will were not sufficient to include property over which he had only a special power of appointment.—Re MOIR'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS (1882), 46 L. After the death of his wife the husband made a codicil confirming his will:—Held: though he could not execute the power in his wife's lifetime, the effect of the codicil was to reiterate the words of the will & the power had been duly executed.—*Re BLACKBURN, SMILES v. from the death of his son, & as to the other half from the death of such widow, upon trust for such of the children of the marriage as the son & his wife should jointly appoint, & in default of any such appointment as the survivor of the son & his wife should appoint & in default for the children equally. Testator died in 1872 & his son in 1899 married & there were two children of the marriage. The son & his wife did not exercise their joint power of appointment & the wife having died in 1922 the son desired to exercise the power of appointment given by testator to the survivor of the son & his wife. On the question whether the son could at the present time validly exercise the power, or whether he was a contingent person with a limited power of appointment which could not be exercised until it was ascertained whether he was the survivor of himself & any wife whom he might thereafter marry:—Held: the son at the present time was not a contingent person within the meaning of the rule but the person to whom the power of appointment had been given, otherwise the son could never exercise the power since he might always marry again & therefore not be the survivor of himself & his wife; as the husband & wife of the first marriage had power to appoint the whole of the fund to the children of the first marriage to the exclusion of any other children, & the wife if she had been the survivor would have had the same power the son must be able to appoint in the same manner; "survivor" meant the survivor of any marriage that the son might enter into & so long as he was the survivor & before he married again he was not a contingent person & could therefore exercise the power.—*Re MILLER, MILLER v. H. H. the elder, the father of H. H. the younger, by his will, dated in June 1893, empowered each child of his by his or her will, or any codicil thereto, to appoint in favour of his or her wife or husband the whole or any part of the yearly income of his or her share of his, testator's, residuary estate for the life of such wife or husband, & directed that a sum of £4,000 thereby directed to be raised should be held upon the same or the like trusts, & subject to the same or the like powers & provisions as were thereinbefore declared with respect to the share of his son H. H. the younger in the residue. H. H. the elder died in 1895, & H. H. the younger in 1899 leaving a widow & three children. H. H. the younger had no power of appointment exercisable in favour of his widow other than the power contained in the will of his father:—Held: the language of the will of H. H. the younger was not sufficient to show an intention to execute a non-existent special power, & accordingly his will did not operate as an appointment under the power given him by the will of his father.

The wife having died without issue, leaving the husband survivor:—Held: this was more than a mere mtge. transaction; there was evidence of an intention to effect a change of the beneficial interest; & there was upon the face of the deed a clear manifestation of such intention, equivalent to a declaration; & consequently the husband & his heirs, & not the heirs of the wife, were entitled to the equity of redemption.—*JACKSON v. 368. —.] — N. being entitled to certain lands as issue in tail, conveyed them in 1749 by lease & release to a mtgee. in fee to secure £800 borrowed, & levied a fine of the lands pursuant to covenant for the purpose of perfecting the security. In 1762 N. borrowed £450 & charged it upon the same lands by deed poll. N. died in 1764, leaving the charge upon the lands of the aggregate sum of £1,250, with an arrear of interest, & he by his will devised all his lands to M. his wife. In 1766, M. having married A., they by lease & release reciting the mtge., & that A. had paid the interest, granted & confirmed the mtged. lands to the mtgee., reserving the equity of redemption to A., his heirs, etc. By a deed in 1789, £300, an arrear of interest, was added to the principal, & the aggregate sum of £1,550 was charged on the lands, subject to redemption as by the former deed. M. died in 1794, leaving H., a son by the first husband, her heir-at-law. In 1797 A. sold part of the mtged. lands, & in consideration of £2,000 principal & interest, paid to the mtgee. & £600 paid to A., he & the mtgee. conveyed such part of the lands to R., the purchaser. The rest of the lands was conveyed by the mtgee. to A. who died in 1799. Under these circumstances the heir-at-law of M. filed a bill in the exchequer to redeem the lands, & the ct. decreed that he was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal money due upon the mtge., & interest calculated from the death of A. Upon appeal to the House of Lords from this decree, it

m. Appointment by registered holder of appointment — Married woman.] — A married woman being registered as the proprietor of an estate for life in certain land, with a general power of appointment in fee, executed a memorandum of mtge. to secure advances to her husband, in the following terms: "I being registered as the holder of a power of appointment over an estate in fee was declared that H., as heir-at-law of M., was entitled, notwithstanding the proviso for redemption reserved to A. by the deed made between him & the mtgee., to redeem the lands "on payment of the principal money & interest, due at the death of M. on the aggregate sum of £1,250. Such interest to be computed according to the proviso in the indenture of release & mtge." A., being entitled in equity to have the interest due at the death of his wife added to the principal, & considered as an aggregate sum with the principal, A. & M. his wife not being bound to keep down the interest during her life for the benefit of her heir-at-law, etc., & that an account should be taken of what was due for principal & interest on the mtge. at the death of M. The decree of the exchequer being varied according to this order, it was referred to the master to take the accounts so directed, & it appeared in evidence before him that A., & M. his wife, during her life, paid to the mtgee. on account of interest, £1,500; that the master in his report did not include this sum, but reported that there was due upon this account for principal £1,250 & for interest at the death of M. £286 9s. 2d. On this ground exceptions were taken to the report, which being in this respect confirmed, & a decree made upon further directions accordingly, a further appeal was presented to the House of Lords. But the decree was affirmed, the House being of opinion that the representative of the husband was not entitled, as against the heir of the wife, to an allowance of interest actually paid by the husband during the life of his wife, & that the former order of the House, directing the account of interest due on the mtge. at the death of M. meant interest actually due.—RUSCOMBE v. He then joins in a transfer of the mtge., & reserves the equity of redemption to himself in fee.—Held: the equity of redemption did not revert to the old uses.—ANSON v. After the husband's death, the wife, by way of appointment under the power contained in the settlement, executed three successive mtges. of the property in fee. Each mtge. deed contained a trust for sale, in default of repayment of the mtge. money; but the language of the two latter deeds differed from that of the former, not only as to the trust for sale, but as to the proviso for reconveyance, & in other respects.—Held: having regard to the construction of the latter deeds taken by themselves, & also in comparison with the former, the wife must be considered as having intended to devote the whole property to purposes beyond those of mere mtge. securities, & consequently by the latter deeds, or one of them, the power was exhausted.—BARNETT v. After executing this mtge. testator made his will, devising the estate, & subsequently paid off the mtge., taking a reconveyance to the same uses, in bar of the dower, as the estate was subject to before the mtge., the dower trustee being the same person in both deeds. A. & his wife made several mtges. all except one limiting the equity of redemption upon or consistently with the uses of the deed of 1817. In 1832 they made under the power in the deed of 1817 another mtge., which limited the equity of redemption to A. & his wife "their heirs or assigns or to such other persons, etc., as they should direct," & by a deed of even date certain terms were assigned to attend the inheritance according to the uses of the mtge. deed of even date. The wife having died the husband claiming to be seised in fee sold. On a bill filed against the purchaser by parties claiming under the son to redeem:—Held: the proviso for redemption in the deed of 1832 was not intended to vary the limitation of the equity of redemption & did not defeat the limitation of the fee in the deed of 1817.

Some months afterwards the husband executed a mtge. reciting merely an agreement for a loan, & thereby appointed that the trustees should hold the lands upon trusts for sale, & securing the repayment of the mtge. money, & subject thereto upon trust for the husband & his heirs:—Held: the equity of redemption was effectually resettled, & belonged to the husband in fee.—*HEATHER v. 377. ———.] — By a marriage settlement land of the husband was conveyed, "for making a provision" for the wife & the issue of the intended marriage, to such uses as the husband & wife should during their joint lives by deed appoint, remainder to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the use of the children of the marriage as the husband & wife should by deed jointly appoint, or as the survivor should by deed or will appoint, & in default of appointment, to the use of the children in equal shares as tenants in common in fee, & if but one child, to the use of that one child in fee, with an ultimate remainder in default of children to the use of the heirs & assigns of the husband. There was a proviso that the grantees to uses & the survivor of them, & the exors. & administrators of the survivor, their or his assigns, should, after the death of the survivor of the husband & wife, & during the respective minorities of any of their children, receive the rents of the share of such child or children, & should, after providing for his, her, or their maintenance & education, invest the surplus, if any, as therein mentioned, & accumulate the same in trust for the persons who should ultimately become absolutely entitled to the shares from which the same should have proceeded. No money fund, other than these accumulations, was included in the settlement, & it contained no power of sale. Some years after the solemnisation of the marriage the husband & wife mortgaged the property. The mtge. deed contained a recital of the settlement, & a recital that the husband & wife had requested the mtgee. to lend them £600 on the security of the property, which he had agreed to do, but it contained no other recital, & by it the husband & wife, in exercise of their joint power, appointed the property to the use of the mtgee. in fee, but subject to a proviso for redemption on payment of the mtge. money. The proviso was for reconveyance of the property to the uses of the settlement. The mtge. contained a power for the mtgee. to sell the property, & a declaration that, in case the property or any part of it should be sold under the power, the mtgee. should, after paying the expenses of sale & the principal & interest due upon the mtge., pay over the surplus, if any, to the husband, his heirs, exors., administrators, or assigns. After the death of the husband the mtgee. sold the whole of the property, & after payment of expenses & the mtge. debt & interest, there remained a surplus in his hands:—Held: there was no resulting trust of the surplus, but the husband's personal representative was entitled to it as part of his personal estate.—*JONES v. A married lady had a power to appoint under a deed of 1807. An invalid & fraudulent deed of 1813 purported to give to her & her husband a joint power of appointment over the same property. They executed the latter power in 1820, reserving a power of revocation & new appointment to the lady. In 1829, after the death of her husband, she professed to execute the power contained in the deed of 1820, & all powers in the deeds therein recited, & all other powers enabling her, & she confirmed the appointment of 1820, which was in favour of legitimate objects of the power under the deed of 1807. Decreed the second husband is a purchaser, & the recital, that he would be entitled to it if the wife should not dispose of it, was a gift.

384. ——Recital.]—Settlement of lands to the use of children as the parents should appoint, & in default of appointment to the children, as tenants in common in tail.

There being only two children, a son & a daughter, the father on the daughter's marriage advanced her a sum exceeding in value her moiety of the lands; & by the settlement executed previous to her marriage, it was declared that such sum was advanced & agreed to be accepted & taken in lieu, bar & full satisfaction of all & every sum & sums of money, legal & beneficial estates & interests whatsoever, to which she then was or at any time thereafter should be entitled under the settlement made on the marriage of her parents:—Held: the daughter was absolutely barred of all estate & interest in the settled lands, & the whole of such lands became vested in the son as tenant in tail.

In such cases there is a presumption, liable however to be rebutted by evidence to the contrary, that the father in so advancing one child intends to clear the property of the claim, of that child for the benefit of his other children, nor of himself, & so as to let such other children have the benefit of the advanced child's share.—*LEE v. A railway co. having under their Act power to take the lands thus settled, M. & his son contracted for the sale to them of a certain part of the lands, & the co. were let into possession on an agreement that the amount of compensation should be settled either by arb'n. or a jury as M. should choose: the co. also paid a sum of money to M. expressly on account of the compensation money to be ultimately fixed: M., however, died before anything further was done:—Held: under these circumstances, that there was no contract the specific performance of which the ct. could enforce or aid in carrying into effect as a defective execution of the joint power of appointment, at the instance of the son & against the parties entitled in remainder under the settlement.—*MORGAN v. 394. — Partial appointment of fund.—Under a marriage settlement, the husband & wife had a power of appointing a fund among their children, & in default of appointment, or so far as it did not extend the fund was to go to the children equally. There were three children of the marriage. An appointment of one-third of the fund was made in favour of one of the children, yet so as not to affect the same power further than to the extent specified, & also, in case of no complete exercise or execution of the same power or authority as to the share of the fund not affected by the appointment, so as not to prejudice or affect the right or contingent interests of the appointee under the proviso for accruer, in case of the death of any or either of the other children, in such manner as specified in the settlement, & notwithstanding that in case of no complete appointment the then "appointment was intended to be made in lieu of all claims & demands" of the appointee to or for any original or principal share of the fund:—Held: the appointors must be taken by necessary implication to have appointed the other two-thirds to their two other children & the appointee was not entitled to share in such two-thirds.—FOSTER v. CAUTLEY (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 55; 26 L. T. O. S. 249; 2 Jur. N. S. 25; 43 E. R. 1150, L. C.

395. — Memorandum with will.—Testator had a power to appoint the produce of a policy on his life amongst his children, by writing or will. By his will he bequeathed all his personal estate to his daughter F. By a contemporaneous writing, unattested, & headed "memorandum," he gave directions to F. as to his property, & said, "the money from the Equitable Insurance Office I would have equally divided between my daughters F. G. & A." & it also expressed his wish that his two sons should have certain interests out of his own property:—Held: (1) testator must be assumed to have known that his will did not operate on the policy fund; (2) the memorandum was an execution of the power; (3) the words "I would have" were imperative, & not mere instructions to F.; (4) F., who was not shown to have obtained the benefits under the will on the faith of any promise to distribute testator's property according to the memorandum, was not bound to do so.

The principle which applies . . . is easily stated. . . Did testator intend this instrument to operate as an execution of the power? Did he simply intend the paper to be instructions (ROMILLY, M.R.).—PROBY v. LANDOR (1860), 28 Beav. 504; 30 L. J. Ch. 593; 6 Jur. N. S. 1278; 9 W. R. 47; 54 E. R.

G., without any direction in writing, delivered the jewels as an absolute gift to V., who retained them in her possession. After the death of G., the question arose as to the validity of the gift to V.:—Held: G. had power to dispose of her whole interest in the jewels without any direction in writing, & under the gift & manual delivery V. was absolutely entitled to them.—*FARRINGTON v. 397. — Appointment of trustees.—A husband & wife, who jointly had a limited power of appointment over settled personalty, executed a deed purporting to appoint to persons not objects of the power. By the death of the husband, the wife became absolutely entitled to the property comprised in the settlement. She appointed a new trustee, & more than once wrote to the mother of the intended appointees about the settled property, & describing the deed of appointment as still standing. It was not shown that she knew of the invalidity of the deed of appointment:—Held: she had sufficiently declared a trust of the settled property in favour of the intended appointees.—Re BENNETT'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS (1867), 17 L. upon trust to pay the rents thereof to C. for life for her separate use ; & after her death he directed them to stand seised of such estates in trust for such persons & purposes as she should by will appoint ; & in default of appointment, he devised the estates to her in fee.

After A.'s death, the trustees were admitted tenants of the copyholds ; & they all died during the lifetime of C.

By her will C. appointed certain persons her trustees, & directed them to sell the copyholds & assure them to the purchaser, his heirs & assigns. After C.'s death, her trustees sold the copyholds by auction, & declined to show the purchaser the devolution of the copyhold title from A.'s surviving trustee, on the ground that under A.'s will his trustees only took an estate for life of C., & that there was an executory devise to her in default of appointment, which had taken effect :—Held : (1) under A.'s will his trustees took an estate of inheritance in quasi fee simple ; (2) C.'s will operated as an exercise by her of her power of appointment ; & (3) the legal estate in the copyholds remained vested in the surviving trustee of A.'s will, & the title thereto must be deduced accordingly.—Re TOWNSEND'S CONTRACT, [1895] 1 Ch. 716 ; 64 L. Shortly afterwards Mr. F. died, & subsequently R. transferred the shares to Mrs. F., who executed the deed of transfer :—Held : the deed of transfer was an exercise in favour of Mrs. F. of the power of appointment reserved to her.—*MARLER v. 401. Presumption of intention to exercise—Words otherwise inoperative—Will.]—A will must be taken to be an execution of a power where the words of it would otherwise have nothing to operate upon.

A feme covert had a general power of appointment over some personal estate of the value of about £2,600. By her will, made in 1841, without referring to any power or property, she gave her husband £2,600. There being no other property over which the will could operate :—Held : independently of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, the will operated as an execution pro tanto of the power.—

402. Donee joining in deed for other purpose—Ignorance of existence of power.]—A married woman being, although unaware of it, the donee of a general power of appointment by deed or will over policy moneys payable upon her own death concurred with her husband in settling certain family estates by an indenture which treated the policy moneys as the husband's own property, & settled them also. Her concurrence in the settlement was for a purpose entirely unconnected with the policy moneys & under it she took a life interest in remainder after her husband's death in the estates, but no interest in the policy moneys. She survived her husband, received in respect of her life interest in the estates sums exceeding the amount of the policy moneys, & died, having by her will given all property over which she had any disposing power to certain beneficiaries :—Held : by her will she had exercised her general power so as to make the policy moneys her own assets, & having taken under the settlement, benefits exceeding the value of the policy moneys, she could not by the exercise of the power take the policy moneys out of the settlement, without making good to the settlement beneficiaries an equal amount from her own estate ; & accordingly the policy moneys must be paid to the settlement trustees. Semble : the concurrence of the donee of the power in the deed of settlement, for purposes unconnected with the policy moneys subject to the power, & in ignorance of the existence of the power, could not operate as an exercise of the power although the deed purported to pass the policy moneys.—*GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN v. 403. —]—Where a person joins as a party to a deed for a specific purpose, he cannot from that fact alone be considered as having joined for a totally different purpose, e.g., that of disposing by the deed, or thereby recognising the disposal of property which is thereby purported to be dealt with by other parties to the deed. H., by his will made in 1855, specifically devised real estate in trust for his daughter E. for life, & gave her a power of appointment over the property amongst her children. He also bequeathed upon similar trusts one-half of his residuary personalty. E. married in 1858, & on her marriage part of the real estate so devised in trust was conveyed by H. upon trust for her for life, & on her death in favour of her children as she should by deed or will appoint. H. died in 1861, & in 1871, a part of the real estate so devised in trust which was not included in the settlement was sold under a power in the will, & the proceeds of sale were invested, the investments being held by the trustees of the will together with the investments representing the residuary personalty. In 1891, E. became one of the trustees of the will, & in 1896, immediately before the marriage of S. one of her daughters, E. appointed to S., subject to her own life interest, one-fifth part of her share in the residuary personalty. The deed contained an erroneous recital that by the settlement on E.'s marriage H. had conveyed all the specifically devised real estate upon the trusts contained in that settlement for the benefit of E. & her children. On the next day by the marriage settlement of S. & F. to which they & E. were parties S. assigned the one-fifth share to which she was entitled in expectancy on the death of E., under the appointment, in the moiety of the residuary personalty & the investments representing the same, "which investments, so far as they comprise or include such moiety are specified in the schedule hereto," upon the trusts of the new settlement. The schedule included investments representing the proceeds of the part of the specifically devised real estate which had been sold. The settlement contained a covenant by E. to pay S. an annuity:—Held: the appointment by E. extended to a fifth of her moiety of the residuary estate only & not to any part of the proceeds of sale, & by the joinder of E. as a party to the settlement a share of the proceeds of sale was not appointed or disposed of.—Re HORSFALL, *HUDLESTON v. Her son died in her lifetime leaving issue one child, a son:—Held: the second will revoked the first, but did not amount to an execution of the power of appointment.—*HARVEY v. General devise or bequest operates as exercise of power.—Testatrix having a general power of appointment over property contained in her marriage settlement, & having also a power of appointing certain exchequer bills left to her subsequently to her marriage, executed the power by her will, which was reserved to her by the marriage settlement, & then disposed of the residue of her property:—Held: the residuary clause was sufficient to pass all property over which testatrix had a power of appointment, which would include the exchequer bills.—*HARRINGTON v. 411. ——Under a marriage settlement £1,000 was settled upon trust for such persons as G. should by will or codicil, or any writing in the nature thereof, appoint. G. executed a document which he called a testamentary appointment, & thereby, in pursuance of his power of appointment under the settlement, he appointed the £1,000, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, whether of his testamentary appointment or of any will or codicil affecting his general property, unto his four sons. G. afterwards by will, after making various specific bequests to his four sons & three daughters, gave, devised, & bequeathed all the rest, residue & remainder of his estate & effects whatsoever & whosoever unto all his children equally. Probate was granted of the will, but not of the testamentary appointment:—Held: by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, the gift in the will operated as a revocation of the prior testamentary appointment, & as an execution of the power of appointment given by the marriage settlement.—Re GIBBES' SETTLEMENT, *WHITE v. sum of £400, to her brother, & the residue of all her properties, of whatsoever kind, " & any properties which may have become to me, or may become to me hereafter by will or otherwise," to her husband whom she appointed exor. She died in 1886, leaving her husband & brother surviving. The will was not discovered until 1888. It was disputed by the brother, but was proved by the husband in 1889. The question was whether the legacy of £400 was presently payable:—Held: the will must be construed as an appointment of the reversionary fund, as to £400 part thereof to the brother, & as to the residue thereof to the husband; & therefore, the legacy of £400 was not payable until the reversionary fund actually fell into possession.—*Re LUDLAM, LUDLAM v. 413. — If no contrary intention shown.—By a marriage settlement, leaseholds were settled upon trust for wife for life for her separate use, & after her decease upon trust as husband should by deed or will appoint, & subject thereto upon trust for such person, etc., as under Statutes of Distribution might be entitled thereto. The husband by his will in 1850, after making certain provision for his only child, as to all other his estate, property, & effects whatsoever & wheresoever, which he should be possessed of, interested in, or entitled to at his decease, subject, as to such parts thereof as were comprised in the settlement, to that settlement & the trusts thereby declared & which indenture he thereby ratified & confirmed in all respects, gave & bequeathed the same to his widow absolutely:—Held: the general residuary bequest operated as an execution of the power of appointment reserved by the settlement.

The presumption of law under the . . . Act [Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26)] is that a general devise or bequest shall operate so as to pass everything over which testator has power of appointing " unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will " (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—*HUTCHINS v. 414. — *Testator came of age in 1914, & on Dec. 12 of that year, being then possessed of certain freehold & leasehold property, settled it by deed on trusts for sale & conversion & then for himself & his children & then for such persons as he should by deed or will appoint. Afterwards on the same day he made a formal will by which he exercised the power of appointment in favour of pltf.'s daughter, & left half of all his other real & personal estate to pltf. & the other half to pltf.'s wife, & appointed pltf. exor. On May 1, 1917, testator made a soldier's will, in which he said " I leave all I have " to deft. Testator died on May 17, 1917, & so far as was known he at that time possessed no real property :—Held: as no contrary intention appeared, the soldier's will operated as an execution of the general power of appointment & as a revocation of the appointment in the first will.—NIXON v. PRINCE (1918), 34 T. L. R. 444.*

415. — Testator bequeathed £1,000,000 to his trustees & declared that so long as his son was living & under twenty-six years of age the income of the fund, & so long as he was living & under thirty years, the income of one moiety thereof, should form part of his residuary estate, & that after the son should attain twenty- six years his trustees should pay to him the income of one moiety thereof until he should attain the age of thirty years or previously die, & after he should attain thirty years should pay to him the whole income thereof, during the remainder of his life & that after his death his trustees should stand possessed of the fund in trust for such person or persons as the son should by will or codicil appoint, & that in default of & subject to such appointment the fund should form part of his residuary estate.

The son while an infant & an officer in the army on active service made his will, & thereby, after giving legacies to a large amount, he devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate of or to which he should be seised, possessed or entitled, or over which he should have a general power of appointment, to certain persons. The son was killed in action while still an infant, & his will was admitted to probate as a soldier's will under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11. His estate was very small apart from the appointed fund. The question arose whether an infant could by a soldier's will exercise a general testamentary power of appointment:—Held: no " contrary intention " within the meaning of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, appeared in the will of the son, but a clear intention of exercising every general power of appointment which he possessed; the power conferred upon him by the will of his father to appoint by will or codicil was thereby conferred upon him whenever he should be of testamentary capacity to make a will or codicil; a power to appoint by will might be validly exercised, by an infant if an infant could make a valid will; that right was preserved to infant soldiers by the combined effects of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 11, 27, & having regard to the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58, s. 3, an infant soldier could validly appoint personal estate over which he had a general power of appointment.—Re WERNHER, WERNHER v. BEIT, [1918] 2 Ch. 82; 87 L. J. Ch. 372; 118 L. T. 388; 34 T. L. R. 391; 62 Sol. Jo. 503, C. A.

416. — Necessity to show contrary intention—Former law distinguished.—Estates A. & B. were so settled that testator had no power of appointment to deal with A., but had a power of appointment over B. By his will, made after Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), he referred to the settlement & confirmed it, & then reciting that he had considerable freehold estates & might become possessed of more he devised all his real estates of which he might die possessed to certain persons as trustees for purposes totally different from those of the settlement: he had not at the date of his will or his death any other estates besides A. & B.:—Held: testator must be taken to have known that he had a power of appointment over estate B.; the confirmation of the settlement operated only upon the estate A., & the devise was a good execution of the power.

I will state generally what I consider the law to be as applicable to cases of this kind, where, if there is an appointment at all, it is an appointment without express reference to the power. It is clearly settled that a general devise or bequest will not independently of the [Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26)] operate as an execution of a power; but it is also settled that where testator disposes of real estate, not having any other than what is subject to the power, he is in such case to be taken as dealing with that estate, & that as to both realty & personalty, if the court is satisfied by the manner in which the particular property is referred to, that testator intended to deal with that property, the disposition will be a valid execution of the power.

... The statute provides as to general powers of appointment that they shall be deemed well executed by a devise, unless a contrary intention appears by the will. . . . It is now absolutely necessary to show a contrary intention to exclude his execution of the power, while under the old law it was needful to show the intention to exercise the power (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).—LAKE v. CURRIE (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 536; 21 L. T. O. S. 26; 16 Jur. 1027; 42 E. R. 981, L. C. & L. J.J.

Accordingly, a general devise or bequest will operate as an execution of such power. But such a general testamentary power of appointment given to a tenant for life, being a married woman, is not equivalent to ownership, so that, as regards the operation of the rule against perpetuities, the interests arising under the execution of the power by the will of the tenant for life, must be considered as created under the deed or will conferring the power. P. bequeathed a sum of stock to his married daughter H. for life, with remainder to such persons as she should by will appoint. 432. ———.]—By a settlement made in 1842 on the marriage of a female infant, the husband & wife covenanted that as soon as the wife attained twenty-one certain real estate to which she was entitled as tenant in tail, & certain personal property belonging to her, should be conveyed, & assigned to trustees upon trust after the death of the wife, for the children of the marriage as the husband & wife by deed, or the survivor of them by deed with or without power of revocation & new appointment, or by will, should appoint, & in default of appointment in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares & by the same settlement the husband assigned a policy of assurance upon his own life to the trustees upon the same trusts. The joint power of appointment was never exercised, & the wife died in 1857, without having executed any disentailing assurance of the real estate. Her eldest son entered into possession of the real estate as tenant in tail. In 1864 the husband, by deed reciting that the eldest son was the heir in tail of his mother, appointed all the trust funds comprised in the settlement, other than the real estate, to the four younger children, & reserved to himself a power of revocation & new appointment by deed or will. The trustees then divided the trust funds with the exception of the moneys secured by the policy, between the four younger children. In 1869 the husband by will in express exercise of the power contained in the marriage settlement, appointed specific sums of money to the eldest son & three of the younger children, & appointed the residue of the settlement funds to the eldest son. In 1878, by deed, reciting the deed of 1864, the division amongst the four younger children, & that the moneys secured by the policy were the only fund remaining subject to the trusts of the settlement, the husband, in exercise of the power reserved by the deed of 1864, revoked the appointment thereby made, & appointed the policy moneys in equal fifths, between his eldest son, his three surviving younger children, & the three children of a deceased younger child, & again reserved to himself a power of revocation. In 1883, the husband by deed made the appointment of 1878 in favour of his eldest son, irrevocable, & in 1888 the husband died. Upon a summons to obtain the opinion of the ct., as to who were the persons entitled under the settlement :—Held : (1) the date of the husband's will being before that of the deed of 1878 there was sufficient evidence of " a contrary intention " within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 24, & consequently the will did not speak from the death of testator so as to revoke the appointment by that deed ; (2) as the deed of 1878, although removing four-fifths of the fund from the operation of the will, did not purport to revoke it, the will under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 19, remained in force, & operated as to the one-fifth ineffectually appointed by the deed of 1878 to the grandchildren of testator ; (3) having regard to the intention shown by the appointor in the deed of 1878, the eldest son was not bound to elect between the real estate, which devolved on him as tenant in tail, & the interest appointed to him by that deed ; but he was bound to elect between such real estate & the benefits derived by him under the will, inasmuch as the will took effect by the operation of law & independently of the intention of testator.

Testator made a subsequent will, which did not pass real estate:—Held: upon the true construction of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 24 & 27, the disposition by the prior will was a good execution of the power contained in the subsequent settlement.—*HODSDON v. 437. ———.]—On Dec. 20, 1881, prior to the marriage, solemnised in England, of a domiciled Englishwoman, a widow, with a domiciled Spaniard, real estate in England of the intended wife was vested by her in a trustee in fee, to such uses as the intended wife should by deed or will appoint, & subject thereto, to the use of the intended wife, for her separate use. The settlement was made with the approbation of the intended husband, & the deed contained a statement that this approbation was given in consideration of a renunciation the same day executed by the intended wife of any rights which she would otherwise have acquired by her marriage in respect of the property of the intended husband according to the law of Spain. The deed also contained a declaration that it was to take effect & be construed according to the law of England. The marriage was solemnised on the next day. On Feb. 23, 1882, the wife, being then domiciled in Spain, executed a deed poll, in accordance with the provisions of the settlement, whereby she, in exercise of the power given to her by the settlement, appointed the real estate to the use of herself in fee for her separate use. By another deed executed the same day, to which the husband was a party, she, with the consent of the husband, appointed & conveyed, & the husband conveyed, the real estate to the use of a trustee in fee, upon trust for sale, & out of the proceeds of sale to pay certain specified debts, & subject thereto, in trust for such person or persons as the wife "shall at any time or times hereafter by any writing or writings from time to time appoint," & in default of any appointment & subject thereto, in trust for the wife absolutely for her separate use. Under this deed the trustee sold the property, & out of the proceeds of sale paid the specified debts, & there then remained a surplus in his hands. The wife died in June, 1882, having by a will, executed immediately after her marriage, & which purported to be made in exercise of the powers reserved to her by her marriage settlement, & of all other powers enabling her, directed, appointed, & declared that the real & personal estate over which she had any disposing power at the time of her death should be held & applied in the payment of certain legacies & annuities, & subject thereto, she gave four-fifths of her real & personal estate, in case she should leave no children, to her husband absolutely. She gave the remaining one-fifth of her property, charged with the before-mentioned annuities & legacies, to her brother & sisters, or to the children per stirpes of such of them as should die before her leaving children. Testatrix died without issue. The husband survived her. According to the law of Spain under such circumstances two-thirds of her property belonged to her father & mother, notwithstanding that she had left a will:—Held: whether the will was or was not a good exercise of the power reserved by the deed of Feb. 1882, it was a valid testamentary disposition by virtue of the limitation in default of appointment to the separate use of testatrix; it took effect according to English law, & the legatees named in it, including the husband, were entitled to the benefits given to them by it. Semble: the will was a valid exercise of the power of appointment given by the deed of Feb. 1882.—*Re HERNANDO, HERNANDO v. After the execution of the will, but in the lifetime of P., O. died, having by will bequeathed £100, East Indian Railway Annuities, in trust for P., for life, with remainder as she should by will appoint, with remainders over:—Held: P.'s will was not confined to the property comprised in her marriage settlement, but operated to exercise the power given her by the will of O.—*Re OLD'S TRUSTS, PENGELLEY v. Testatrix died in 1857:—Held: reading together Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 24, 27, the will operated as an exercise of the power given or reserved by the subsequent deed poll & passed the property to X.—

460. What amounts to contrary intention—Bequest of estate "not otherwise effectually disposed of."—By a voluntary settlement in 1818, a settlor transferred a debt to a trustee in trust for such persons & purposes as the settlor should by any deed or instrument in writing appoint, & in default, to pay the income to the settlor for his life, & on his death to distribute the amount amongst specified persons. He afterwards executed an appointment by deed of part of the fund, & confirmed the trusts of the settlement as to the remainder. By his will, made in 1852, the settlor gave certain legacies, & then gave "all his personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of" to trustees:—Held: (1) the settlor had sufficiently expressed his intention not to affect the unappointed property comprised in the settlement of 1818; & (2) even if no such intention appeared, Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, applied only to cases where the power of appointment was equivalent to absolute property.

Semble: the power of appointment contained in the deed did not authorise an appointment by will.

It is not the duty of the ct. to strain the words of a power of appointment, in order to bring them within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, but to ascertain whether the power is in the widest & most general terms.—*MOSS v. will executed by the ultimate survivor during the joint lives.

Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 7, 8, preserve the previously existing incapacities arising from infancy & coverture respectively, but Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 8, does not preserve, in the case of married women, any incapacities not specially dependent on coverture, which are removed generally by other sects. of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), as, for example, those relating to after-acquired property or power. Therefore, where a general power was vested in the survivor of A., B., & C., a married woman with testamentary capacity, & C. ultimately became the survivor:—Held: the power was well exercised by a residuary devise in the will of C., made while under coverture & during the life of B.

(2) The circumstance that the devise contained limitations for the life of B.:—Held: not to be a conclusive indication of an intention not to exercise a power which would only come into existence in the event of B. predeceasing testatrix.—*THOMAS v. By a voluntary settlement in Aug. 1862, B. conveyed all his freehold property upon trust, after his own death, for E., for life, with remainder as B. should "by his last will or any codicil thereto," appoint, & in default of appointment, in trust for E. in fee, & by the same settlement he disposed of all his leasehold & personal property. In Nov. 1862, B., by an instrument purporting to be his last will, & not mentioning any former will, appointed under the power in the settlement an annuity to be raised out of his freehold property, & devised all his copyhold property; but made no other disposition of freehold or personal property. Probate of both wills was granted:—Held: having regard to the terms of the power testator had indicated an intention that the will of 1862 alone should operate as an execution of the power, & consequently the specific & residuary devises in the will of 1858 were not a due execution of the power.—*PETTINGER v. 467. — Codicil explaining will.]—By voluntary deed A. settled property including £1,000 due to him from his son-in-law B., such sum to be allowed to remain owing during A.'s lifetime but not after his death, except on the terms of obtaining security by the assignment of a policy upon B.'s life, upon such trusts as A. should by will or deed appoint, & in default of appointment on trust to pay the interest to A. for life & after his death on trusts for his daughters & their children under which the interests of daughters ceased on their death without issue. By a subsequent will A. bequeathed his residuary estate on trust for his daughters & their children under which daughters dying without issue had power by will to appoint their shares. By a codicil, after reciting that he had advanced to B. other sums besides the £1,000, & that under the settlement & under the will or one of them his daughter, B.'s wife, would be entitled for her life, & their children would be entitled in remainder to a certain share in the property comprised in the settlement A. declared that such share under the settlement or will, or either of them, should be taken to be satisfied out of the moneys owing to him by B. other than the £1,000. On the day following the execution of this codicil B. assigned to A. a policy of assurance on his life as security for £2,000 then owing by him to A.:—Held: no contrary intention had been shown within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27; & accordingly that the residuary gift in the will was an execution of the general power reserved by the settlement.—*Re CLARK'S ESTATE, MADDICK v. 468. — Property “which I possess or to which I am entitled.”—Testatrix had general testamentary powers of appointment over funds comprised in her marriage settlement, & over a settled legacy & share of residue under a will. Her husband, if he survived her, had a life interest in both funds. By her will she bequeathed, subject to her husband's life interest therein & his enjoyment of the annual income thereof, “all stocks, shares & securities which I possess or to which I am entitled,” to her sisters, & desired that after the death of her husband all such stocks, shares, & securities should be & become the absolute property of her sisters in equal proportions. The settled funds were represented by colonial & railway stocks & a small sum of cash:—Held: the gift was a bequest of personal property described in a general manner within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27; the words “which I possess or to which I am entitled” did not show a contrary intention; & the will therefore exercised the powers to the extent to which the property subject to them came within the definition of “stocks, shares & securities.”—*Re JACOB. The widow by her will, dated in 1885, devised & bequeathed all her estate & effects real & personal which she might die possessed of or entitled to unto her daughter absolutely:—Held: by force of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, the general devise & bequest in the widow's will operated as an exercise to the extent of £20,000 of the power of appointment contained in the will of testator.—*Re JONES, GREENE v. A power of sale was given by W.'s will, whereby it was also declared that any of W.'s children who should call in question his will should be deprived of all interest thereunder, & if J. should do so, testator's wife, should not be able to exercise the power to appoint in his favour.

J. died before the wife, who by her will gave all the residue of her real & personal estate not thereby otherwise disposed of upon certain trusts:—Held: (1) a charge on testator's residuary real & personal estate for any sum which his wife might appoint under the power was created by the words “subject as aforesaid”; (2) notwithstanding the words as to the children calling in question the will, she had, in the events which happened, a general power of appointment in respect of the sum which might be raised; (3) although there was no trust for conversion, the power was an overriding one to appoint a fund of mixed realty & personalty; (4) by virtue of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, the power was exercised by the residuary gift in the wife's will.—*Re WILKINSON, THOMAS v. The settlement contained a power for the trustee to sell the real estate, with a direction to lay out the proceeds, with A.'s consent, in the purchase of other hereditaments to be settled to the like uses, with a power of interim investment, with the like consent in govt. securities. By his will dated 1831, & confirmed, subject to the settlement, by a codicil executed shortly after the settlement, A.'s father devised the property, subject to the settlement, & all other his real estate, to the use of A. for life, & in default of her having any issue, to such uses as she should by will appoint. Some years afterwards, A.'s father & husband both having died, & there having been no issue of the marriage, the trustees of the settlement, at A.'s request, sold all the settled real estate for a sum of £24,226 2s. Consols, which they transferred to her. A. died a widow in 1879, having by her will, made shortly after the transfer to her of the consols, after appointing exors. & bequeathing pecuniary legacies amounting to upwards of £30,000 bequeathed "all the residue of my personal estate & effects whatsoever" to two persons absolutely. The personal estate to which A. was entitled at the date of her will & of her death, independently of the Consols, did not amount to more than £6,000 :—Held : the general devise of personal estate contained in A.'s will operated as an execution of the powers of appointment over the real estate given to her by her marriage settlement & by her father's will, & passed the Consols.—*CHANDLER v. 482. —.]—By a marriage settlement executed in Mar. 1823, real estate was conveyed to trustees in fee, to their use during the life of the wife, on trust to pay the rents to her for her life, & after her death to such uses as the husband should by deed or writing, to be by him executed & delivered in the presence of & attested by two witnesses, appoint, &, in default of appointment & subject thereto, to the common dowry uses in favour of the husband. There was a power for the trustees to sell the property with the consent of the husband & wife during their joint lives, & the money to arise from any sale was to be laid out in the purchase of other land, to be settled to the same uses, & until the reinvestment should be made the money was to be invested (inter alia) the public funds, & the income was to be payable to the persons to whom the rents of the land to be purchased would go. During the joint lives of the husband & wife, & before the date of the husband's will, the land was sold, & the proceeds of the sale were invested in new 3 per cents. in the names of the trustees. No purchase of land was ever made, but the income of the stock was paid to the wife during her life. In Oct. 1844, the husband made his will, which was signed by him & sealed, & attested by two witnesses. The will contained the following bequest: "I also give & bequeath all the money & moneys that I die possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of W., or elsewhere, after my funeral expenses are paid, unto the sole use & behoof of my children hereinbefore named, share & share alike." W. was one of the trustees of the will, & at the time of testator's death he had in his hands some money belonging to testator. Testator had no money of his own in the funds, nor had he any power of appointment other than that contained in the settlement. Testator died on Dec. 28, 1851. His wife died on Oct. 24, 1881. After her death the question arose whether testator had by his will exercised the power of appointment contained in the settlement, or whether the sum of stock passed as unappointed to his heir-at-law:—Held: inasmuch as the wife had a right to call for the reinvestment of the stock in land, it must be considered as having been land at the time of testator's death, & the will did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointment consequently, the stock passed to testator's heir-at-law.—Re GREAVES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS (1883), 23 Ch. A. made his will in Apr. 1824, & after reciting that under B.’s will, he was entitled to considerable sums of personalty, & that he had settled £3,000 part thereof, upon his daughter, & £2,500 other part thereof, upon his wife upon his marriage, testator ratified & confirmed the settlements made by him upon his daughter & his wife, & as to all the residue & remainder of the moneys to which he was entitled under B.’s will, he gave them upon trusts under which his wife eventually became entitled. Testator died in 1839, & his wife died in 1869:—Held: under the above circumstances testator had not, by the residuary gift in his will, exercised the power of appointment conferred on him by the settlement ;

Testatrix, donee of a special power of appointment, made a will by which she duly & in terms exercised such power of appointment. In a later & holograph will executed by her were these words, "I wish to leave at my death everything I have power to will to my husband":—Held: testatrix meant to exercise & did exercise the special power by the later will, & that will revoked the earlier will.—*WRIGLEY v. By his will, which recited that he had power to appoint the fund after the death of his wife, the husband appointed that "after the death of my said wife" three-fifths of the fund should be held in trust for his elder son, & two-fifths for his younger son, these sons being the only issue of the marriage. The deed creating the power contained an investment clause which authorised a much wider range of investments. Testatrix had only this one power of appointment, & little or no other property except that which was comprised in the power of appointment:—Held: (1) evidence was admissible of the surrounding circumstances at the date of the death, including the question of the state of her property, & there was sufficient in the will to indicate an intention to exercise the power of appointment notwithstanding that it purported to provide for the payment of debts, & the appointment to the trustees of the will was not such an inconsistent provision as to prevent the will being a good exercise of the power of appointment; (2) though the power was well exercised it did not have the effect of vesting in the trustees nominated in the appointment the trust property, but the trustees of the deed creating the power held it on the trusts declared by the will.—*Re MACKENZIE, THORNTON v. The value of the twelfth share was about £17,000. L. the son & only child of E. married in 1889, & had two children, both born in E.'s lifetime.

In 1900 by a separation deed made between L. of the first part, his wife of the second part, E. of the third part, & trustees of the fourth part, after reciting an agreement between the parties of the first three parts that L. & his wife should enter into a separation deed, to which E. should be a party & should enter into such covenant as thereafter contained, & that L. should make such settlement as thereafter contained, & that he was entitled to one-twelfth of the residuary estate of his grandfather, subject to E.'s life interest therein, the parties of the first, second & fourth parts entered into mutual covenants providing for the husband & wife living part. E. separately covenanted to pay during her life to L. the sum of £300 per annum, & then L. as settlor assigned to the trustees the sum of £10,000 to be raised out of the shares to which he was entitled in reversion as soon as it fell into possession to be held on trusts, in the events which happened, for the benefit of his two children. In Feb. 1909, L. died & by his will left his estate to charities. Subsequently E. by a deed poll appointed the twelfth share upon trusts for the benefit of L.'s two children & their respective issue to be born in her lifetime. E. died in 1915, & the question arose whether the separation deed had in any way affected her power of appointment:—Held: having regard to the terms of the separation deed & the surrounding circumstances the intention of the parties was that E. should release her power of appointment to the extent of £10,000 only, & consequently the deed poll operated as an effective appointment of the balance, of the twelfth share in favour of L.'s two children & their respective issue.—Re SUGDEN'S TRUSTS, SUGDEN v. WALKER, [1917] 2 Ch. 92; 86 L. J. Ch. 447; 117 L. T. 49, C. A.

Having by deed appointed part to his son, he, by will, reciting that the son could, under the hotchpot clause, be obliged to bring in the appointed part, proceeded, " & then as I make no further appointment," the whole settled fund must be equally divided between A. & B. 531. ———.]—M. by will devised her estates to her son-in-law B. for life, remainder to her daughter F. his wife for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the use of the children of the marriage as B. & F. should jointly appoint by deed, or as the survivor should appoint by deed or will, & in default of appointment, to the use of trustees for a term of five hundred years to commence on the death of the survivor of B. & F., & subject thereto, to the use of P., eldest son of B. & F. in strict settlement. The trusts of the term were, (a) on request of B. & F. to raise £10,000 for B. & F., & (b) to raise for each younger child of B. & F. any sums not exceeding £1,000 apiece, as B. & F. jointly by deed, or the survivor by deed or will, should appoint & in default of appointment £1,000 apiece, payable after the decease of the survivor of B. & F., unless they or the survivor should appoint the same to be raised in his or her lifetime, in which case, the term was to commence on such last mentioned appointment. F., the wife, died, leaving B. her surviving, without having joined in any appointment under the will; & leaving four sons besides P. & a daughter. On the marriage of the daughter B. by deed appointed to her £1,000 payable on his decease. After this B. made his will, by which he gave a legacy to his daughter, & to each of his other younger children, bequeathed "such a sum of money as with" what they are entitled to under, amongst other settlements referred to, "the will of M. will make up to each £8,000": & "all the residue of my personal estate & all my real estate over which I have any disposing power I give," etc. to P. & his heirs. At the time when this will was executed, B. resided on an estate derived from his own family, which was partly settled & partly held in fee:—Held: the devise of "all my real estate over which I have any disposing power" was under the circumstances to be construed as a devise of the unsettled patrimonial estate of B., & did not operate as an execution of the limited power of appointment over the estates which he held as tenant for life under M.'s will.—COOKE v. CUNLIFFE (1851), 17 Q. B. 245; 21 L. J. Q. B. 30; 15 Jur. 1076; 117 E. R. 1274.

By her will, which contained no reference to the limited power or to the property subject thereto, she gave, devised, & bequeathed all her real & personal estate, & appointed all real & personal estate over which she might have a power of appointment unto her husband absolutely:—Held: testatrix had clearly expressed her intention of exercising every power she had in favour of her husband, & the limited power was therefore exercised.—*Re SHARLAND, Re REW, REW v. —Testatrix having a testamentary power of appointment in favour of her children over certain sums of stock standing in the names of A. & B. as trustees, gave & bequeathed, & by virtue of every power enabling her in that behalf, appointed, all the property of or to which she was then, or, at the time of her death, should or might be possessed or entitled or have power to dispose to A. & B. upon trust, after payment of her debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, to invest the residue thereof, in their names, in the funds, or upon govt. or real security; & she then declared trusts in favour of her children. She died possessed of personal estate more than sufficient to pay her debts & funeral & testamentary expenses:—Held: her will was not an exercise of the power.—*CLOGSTOUN v. It did not appear whether the personal estate was sufficient for the debts & funeral & testamentary expenses; but testator had no real estate of his own, except a contingent reversion in the subject of the power:—Held: (1) though the debts & expenses could not be paid out of the settled estate, the appointment was not thereby invalidated; (2) independently of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), there was a sufficient indication of an intention to appoint.—*Cowx v. 538. ———.] —Testatrix under her marriage settlement had power to appoint the settled funds amongst the children & issue of the marriage.

By her will testatrix gave all her residuary real & personal estate, "which by virtue of any power or authority, or of any separate right of property she was competent to dispose of," to trustees upon trust to sell & convert into money, & thereout pay her funeral & testamentary expenses, & to invest the residue & hold the same upon trust to pay the income to her husband during his life, & after his decease as to one-seventh part in trust for her son, & as to the remaining six-sevenths in trust for her daughters, with a direction that the trustees were to retain the daughter's shares upon trusts in favour of each daughter for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her death in favour of her children. There was evidence that testatrix & her husband had forgotten the existence of the settlement. The question was whether or not the will operated as an exercise of the power of appointment:—Held: (1) the evidence as to the settlement having been forgotten could not be acted upon; & if the will were not regarded as an exercise of the power, words would have to be struck out of the will, upon the face of which there was a clear intention to exercise any testamentary power testatrix might have; (2) the daughters took their shares of the settled funds free from the fetters attempted to be imposed by the subsequent direction.—Re BOYD, NIELD v. BOYD (1890), 63 L. T. 92.

& spinsterhood of her only child, a daughter, for her maintenance & to accumulate the surplus, & on the daughter attaining twenty-one or marrying the whole to her for life, with remainders over. Testatrix had a power of appointment among her children over property settled in default of appointment on such children at twenty-one or marriage:—Held: the power was not executed.—*Re COTTON, WOOD v. 540. ———.] —By a settlement, made in 1863 on the marriage of W. & X., leasehold hereditaments were settled upon trust, after the decease of the survivor of them, for all & every the children & child of the marriage in such parts & shares as the survivor should by will or codicil appoint. W. survived X., & by his will, after making bequests of a watch, a picture, & an organ, he gave, devised, bequeathed, & appointed all the residue of his "estate," "real as well as personal," unto trustees, upon trust to convert into money such parts of "the said trust premises" as should not consist of money, & out of the proceeds to pay his funeral expenses & debts, & to pay & divide the residue of "such trust moneys & premises unto & equally between" his sons A., P., & R., declaring that he made no provision for his other children because they were sufficiently provided for. Testator then empowered his trustees to postpone the conversion of his "real & personal estate" for so long as they should think proper, & during the postponement to manage, lease, or let his "real & leasehold estates," & out of the capital or income thereof to make any proper outlay for improvements, repairs, insurance, or otherwise for the benefit of his "real & personal estate," but declared that no property not actually producing income which should form part of his estate should be treated as producing income. Testator also declared that the trustees might invest the "trust moneys representing the shares" of P. & R. during their respective minorities in certain specified securities, & that during their minorities the trustees should pay the whole income of those shares to A. as their guardian for their maintenance:—Held: the will did not operate as an exercise of the special power given by the settlement.

For the exercise of a special power there must be either (a) a reference to the power, or (b) a reference to the property subject to the power, or (c) an intention otherwise expressed in the will to exercise the power (BUCKLEY, J.).—*Re WESTON'S SETTLEMENT, NEEVES v. By his will C. referred to & confirmed his first marriage settlement, & directed the trusts thereof to be fully carried out; & he also referred to & confirmed his second marriage settlement, & directed a fund to provide his second wife's life annuity to be invested. He then made certain other bequests, & as to all the rest, residue, & remainder of his real & personal estate, & which he should in any way have power to dispose of or appoint by will, he gave, devised, & bequeathed the same unto & to the use of his exors. & trustees upon trust for conversion, & out of the proceeds to pay his funeral & testamentary expenses & debts, & legacies, & to divide the residue thereof among such of the children of his first marriage as should be living at his death, but as to the shares of his daughters therein, he settled them on his daughters for life, then on their husbands for life, then on the issue of the daughters as they should appoint, & in default of such appointment then to his daughters' children, as to sons at twenty-one, as to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, & in default of daughters' children, then as his daughters should generally appoint, & in default of such appointment, then for his daughters' next of kin:—Held: the will of C. operated as an exercise of the power to appoint among the

555. Statements distinguishing general & special power.—In 1881 the balance of a legacy & certain investments were settled upon trust for W. for life &, after her death, upon trust as to the balance of the legacy for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint, & as to the investments for her blood relations as she should in like manner appoint, & in default of appointment for her next of kin. By her will made in Jan. 1917, W. gave the balance of the legacy, describing it as "the only part of my money I can leave to other than blood relations," to certain persons. She then gave pecuniary legacies to several persons who were some of her blood relations, including £50 to her sister & £600 to each of her two nephews sons of her brother Robert, & directed the residue of her "money" other than the aforesaid balance of the legacy to be equally divided between her sister & her said two nephews. W. died in July, 1917, & questions arose as to whether her will executed her special power &, if it did, whether her will was a fraud on the power to the extent of the benefits conferred on the two nephews. There was no evidence of a fraud on the power other than a letter written by W. in 1911 to her two nephews in which she in effect stated that in 1891 she verbally agreed with her brother Robert to appoint £2,000 to him or his family on condition that he paid her an annuity of £80 per annum, & expressed her intention of carrying out the bargain:—Held: (1) the will sufficiently referred to the special power & to the subject matter of the power, & operated as an execution of the power; (2) the letter was admissible in evidence to show the motive which actuated W. in making the appointments of the two nephews, the onus was on them to show that she had abandoned her improper motive when she made her will, the onus was not discharged, & therefore the appointments to them were a fraud on the power.—Re WRIGHT,

Testatrix, by her will proved in 1909, gave one moiety of her residuary estate in trust for her daughter, with a direction that the income thereof was to be held in trust for her daughter during her life, & after her death the capital thereof was to be held, subject to the appointment of any life interest to any future husband of the daughter as thereafter mentioned, upon trust for the children of the daughter living at her death who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, with a provision that if no child should attain a vested interest, the share should be held in trust absolutely for such persons as the daughter should by will appoint, & in default of appointment for testatrix's son; & testatrix thereby empowered her daughter by deed or will to appoint for the benefit of any future husband who might survive her during his life or any less period all or any part of the income of her share.

The daughter's first husband died in 1910, the only issue of that marriage being a daughter, who was born in 1898. In the year 1910 testatrix's daughter married A., her second husband. She died in 1912, having made a will whereby she appointed A. guardian of her infant daughter & proceeded: "I give, devise, appoint & bequeath all my estate, property & effects, whatsoever & wheresoever, both real & personal, which I have power to dispose of by my will, to my said husband, A., absolutely, & I appoint A. sole exor. of this my will":—Held: the daughter's will executed the special power of appointing the income of her share in favour of her second husband during his life.—Re ACKERLEY, CHAPMAN v. The only property testator had was a sum of £144 Consols, his title to which was disputed at the date of the will, but which was afterwards assigned to him, & his interest in the one-eighth share of the trust fund of a son deceased during his life:—Held: (1) it was not his intention to refer to & describe either of these two interests; & therefore the will was a good appointment; (2) the gift of the £100 to the grandson was a condition imposed on the appointees, & as such, void, & the appointees took the whole trust fund.—*ROOKE v. children who should marry was to have power to make a settlement of his share, with the consent of his mother, for the lives of the parties, & the lives of their issue, with remainder over in tail. By a second codicil annexed to his will, reciting the above devise, testator devised the premises after the decease of his wife to B., C., & D., upon trust for the equal use of his three children as tenants in common for ninety-nine years from the day of his decease, if they or either of them should so long live; & from & after the determination of that term, & in the meantime subject thereto, to the trustees in fee, to preserve contingent remainders; with power to testator's daughter, if unmarried, to devise one-third part in fee or for life; & the uses, subject to those in the codicil declared, which were expressed in the will, as far as the rules of law would permit, were to be carried into perfect execution. By other codicils, C. James & another were appointed trustees in lieu of C. & D. Testator's widow & C. James alone acted in execution of the trusts of the will & C. James died in the lifetime of the widow, intestate, leaving an eldest son his heir-at-law. Testator's daughter died unmarried, & without any reference to the power given her by the will, devised all her then present & future right & interest in the property in question to her mother. Testator's widow by her will, after various devises & bequests, gave & devised the residue of her estate & effects, both real & personal, (equally between her grandchildren:—Held: the will of testator's daughter operated as an appointment in exercise of the power over her one-third part of the estate.—*BROOKE v. The will did not contain any reference to the £4,000 or to any power of appointment:—Held: the power was well executed by the residuary bequest, & L. was entitled to the whole sum of £4,000 to the exclusion of the legatees.—*LOWE v. The residue of the estate to be to the use of the husband, absolutely. By his will the husband gave, devised, & bequeathed "the whole of my property real & personal, consisting of a farm," describing the freehold estate above mentioned, " & whatever may devolve to me by virtue of the marriage settlement," to a trustee, upon trust, after the death of his wife, for his five children, in unequal shares. He further gave to the trustee a discretionary power either to divide the income of "my entire property" according to the provisions before made, or to sell the whole, & divide the proceeds:—Held: the will did not operate as an exercise of the power of appointment.—WILDMORE v. GREGORY (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 482; 41 L. J. Ch. 120; 19 W. R. 967.

578. —.]—If testator manifests an intention to exercise by his will a special power of appointment by reason of his making some gifts of property which he describes as "my" property, but the words of which gifts cannot be satisfied unless they pass property subject to the power, the ct. will assume that he intended also to exercise the power in the case of other gifts in the will which are capable of passing other property subject to the power, although the words of gift can be satisfied by means of property belonging to testator himself. Testator had under a settlement a special power to appoint by will two estates at B. & at S. respectively, & also some shares in the B. colliery. By his will he made gifts of "my estates at B." & of "my estate at S.," & he made another gift of "all my share & interest in the B., H., & W. Colliery cos." He had no property of his own at either B. or S., but he had some shares of his own in the B. colliery:—Held: the will operated as an exercise of the power, not only as regarded the estates at B. & S., but also as regarded the settled shares in the B. colliery.—*RE WAIT, WORKMAN v. The bankers invested the sum as directed, & paid the dividend of the aggregate fund to the husband during his life. No notice was given to the trustees of the fresh investment:—Held: there was no resulting trust of the sum of £2,000 for the husband, but that it became subject to the trusts of the settlement as an augmentation of the trust fund.

594. ———.] —(1) Where a donor recommends or directs, that the donee, at her death, shall give his personal property to such of his family or such of his relations as she shall think fit, the donee has a power to select the objects of her bounty amongst his relations or family, though not within the degree of next of kin. (2) If the donee does not exercise the power, the word "relations," or the word "family," will be construed "next of kin," unless the special expressions of the donee have a different import.

(3) It is well settled that if a donee of a power has no freehold estate except that which is the subject of the power the will of the donee giving freehold estate with it so far deemed an execution of the power. . . . There is no distinction between freeholds & leaseholds in the nature of the subjects. . . . 595. ———.] —S. was seised of lands in the county of Surrey, as to one moiety in fee by descent. The other moiety was limited to her for her life, with a power to appoint an estate in fee by deed or will, with remainders over in default of appointment. S. by her will devised all her freehold estates in the county of Surrey to J. for life, on the condition, that out of the rents he should keep them in repair. At his death the lands chargeable with an annuity were by this will devised to the children of J. with remainders over. S. died, leaving J. surviving; & she, at the respective times of making her will & her death, had no other lands in Surrey but those before stated. Upon the argument of a special verdict, stating these facts, held in the Ct. of Common Pleas, that this was a valid execution of the power: but this judgment was reversed in the Ct. of K. B.

In no instance has a power or authority been considered as executed unless by some reference to the power or authority or to the property which was the subject of it, or unless the provision made by the person entrusted with the power would have been ineffectual, would have had nothing to operate upon, except it were considered as an execution of such power or authority (ALEXANDER, C.B.).—*ROAKE v. She was also entitled for life under the will of her husband to the dividends of £10,000 Consols, & of various other stocks, with a power of appointment by deed or will attested by two witnesses over one-third part of such sums, & in default of appointment the stock was limited to other parties. By an unattested will not referring to the powers, she gave four several sums, amounting to £3,000 Consols, "in the 3 per cent. Consols" to four charities, & "the remainder in the 3 per cents." & in the other stocks in the settlement, naming them, to other parties:—Held: (1) the will operated as an execution of the power under the will of the husband, & also, that the words "the remainder in the 3 per cents." sufficiently showed that the legacies previously given were part of a larger amount of stock in that specific fund, & whether the specific stock referred to might mean stock which testatrix might purchase between the date of her will & her death, or stock existing at the date of her will, still the gifts were specific.

The husband became bankrupt, & after his bankruptcy, he & his wife made a joint appointment in favour of two of the children of the marriage. The husband then died, & a bill having been subsequently filed by a person claiming under the bankruptcy, for an account of the rents of the settled estate, the wife thereupon executed a separate appointment in favour of the same children, which she stated in her answer:—Held: (1) the joint appointment was inoperative, on the ground that the husband could not, by a subsequent execution of the power, deprive his assigns of an estate which had been once vested in them by his bankruptcy; (2) such joint appointment could not be considered as the separate appointment of the wife, who survived; (3) the wife's separate appointment after the husband's death was a good exercise of the power; (4) the account of the rents prayed by the bill could not be extended beyond the date of that appointment.—*HOLE v. #### SUB-SECT. C.—CONFIRMATION OF INVALID EXERCISE.

635. Acceptance by appointee.]—In order to make the acceptance of a gift under a supposed power of appointment operate as a confirmation of the power, there must be full knowledge, on the part of the person accepting the gift, of the invalidity of the power.

T., on his marriage with E., settled a sum of £10,000 upon trust for himself for life, with remainder to E. for life, with remainder, in default of children of the marriage, to the then present children of E. by her former marriage, other than A., her eldest son, who should attain the age of twenty-one years, if more than one, in equal shares, & in default of such younger children, in trust for A., his exors., administrators & assigns. After the death of T., there being no children of the marriage, E., erroneously believing that she had a power of appointment, at the request of D., one of her younger children by the former marriage, affected to appoint a portion of the fund in his favour, & assigned to him her life interest therein. She afterwards by will made a general appointment in favour of B., her only other child. By the death of A. in the lifetime of E., D. became her eldest son:—Held: neither the acceptance of the appointment nor of the life interest amounted to a confirmation by D. of E.'s power of appointment.—SANDEMAN v. MACKENZIE (1861), 1 John. & H. 613; 30 L. J. Ch. 838; 5 L. T. 175; 7 Jur. N. S. 1231; 70 E. R. 880.

SECT. 10.—OPERATION OF APPOINTMENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—EXTENT OF EXERCISE OF POWER.

A. In General.

637. Governed by intention of donee of power.]

—By a marriage settlement certain funds were vested in trustees upon trust for such person or persons as the wife, notwithstanding coverture, should appoint, & in default of appointment, upon trusts for certain persons. By her will the wife, in exercise of the power, appointed that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds in trust to pay certain legacies, including a legacy of £2,000, which lapsed by reason of the death of the legatee in the lifetime of testatrix, & after directing that her funeral expenses & expenses of proving her will, & also that the legacies should be paid free of duty, she bequeathed all the residue of her personal estate to her nephew, who died in her lifetime:—Held: the will showed an intention on the part of testatrix to dispose of the whole of the trust fund, so as to take it out of the settlement, & the balance, after paying the legacy duty & expenses, belonged to the husband, as administrator, & not to the persons under the trust in default of appointment in the settlement.—Re PINNIDE'S SETTLEMENT (1879), 12 Ch. D. 667; 48 L. J. Ch. 741; 41 L. T. 579; 28 W. R. 178.

638. —.]—Testator gave to his mother a general testamentary power of appointment over real estate, provided that, should his mother die without any will, then the estate was to go to E. The mother by will gave all her real estate, including that over which she had any power of appointment, to trustees in trust for G., who died in her lifetime:—Held: there was no distinction between real & personal estate, & the property belonged to the trustees of the mother's will, subject to a resulting trust for her heir-at-law, if any.

The true rule appears to me to be that the question in all cases of the class now before me is one of intention, namely, whether the donee of the power meant by the exercise of it to take the property dealt with out of the instrument creating the power for all purposes or only for the limited purpose of giving effect to the particular disposition expressed (JESSEL, M.R.).—*Re VAN HAGAN, SPERLING v. 640. Appointed sum & general residue treated as one fund—Partial failure of trusts of appointed sum—Whether passing as unappointed.]—(1) Testatrix, having a power over a sum of money, appointed it to A. & B., on certain trusts, & she also gave them, on trust, her residuary personal estate, after payment of her debts. She made no beneficial bequest of her residue, & appointed two other persons her exors. The trusts declared of the appointed fund did not exhaust it:—Held: the surplus fell into the residue, & did not pass as unappointed.

(2) A. had, under her father's will, a power to appoint £10,000. By changes in the investment, the fund had increased to £11,495, of which £10,000 was lent on mtge. to C., & £1,495 on mtge. to A. By her will, after reciting that under her father's will she had power to appoint £10,000, A., in exercise of her power, appointed "the sum of £10,000 now secured on mtge. of C.'s estate, & any other moneys representing the same":—Held: the whole £11,495 was well appointed.—*LEFEVRE v. 642. Appointees also executors—Lapse of gift to two appointees.]—By a marriage settlement certain real & personal property was vested in trustees to be dealt with & disposed of as the wife should from time to time, by deed, appoint, & until such appointment, upon trust, during the lives of the husband & wife, to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, & if the wife should die first, then the property to be held in trust for such persons as she should, by will, appoint, & in default of appointment, for the husband for life, & after his decease for other persons absolutely; & the settlement contained a full covenant to settle all other property of the wife. There were no children of the marriage; & soon after it had taken place the lady exercised the first power, & resettled the property, with this difference, that she then excluded her husband from any life interest in it. On the same day she made her will, whereby, in exercise of the powers reserved to her, she appointed the property upon trusts for conversion & payment of debts & legacies, & as to all the residue of her real & personal estate, after answering the purposes aforesaid, she gave & bequeathed the same "to the persons thereafter appointed her exors., in equal shares," & appointed A., B. & C. her exors., of whom A. attested her will, & B. predeceased her:—Held: (1) the gift was to A., B. & C. as individuals, & C. took one-third only of the residue; (2) the remaining two-thirds went under the settlement trusts, as in default of appointment.—*HOARE v. L. having predeceased A.:—Held: A. had by her will shown an intention to make the legacy of £770 part of her property for all purposes, & the two-thirds which had been appointed to L. passed therefore to the next-of-kin of A., & not to M. One of the brothers predeceased her:—Held: she had treated the property, the subject of the power, as her own, so that the gift over, in default of appointment, contained in the original instrument, did not take effect, & there was, therefore, an intestacy.—*WILLOUGHBY OSBORNE v. Throughout her will she drew no distinction between property which belonged to her & property over which she had only a power of disposition. Testatrix was possessed of considerable personal estate in addition to the £5,000. Two of the appointees having died in the lifetime of testatrix:—Held: she had not indicated a sufficient intention to make this £5,000 her own for all purposes, & consequently two-eighths of the fund lapsed, & went as in default of appointment.

It is true she appoints an exor., & if her own estate had been insufficient to pay her debts & the legacies which are not expressly payable out of her own property, then no doubt the £5,000 would have been applicable to make good the deficiency & to that extent the exor. might have had recourse to it. But her own property was more than sufficient to pay all her debts & legacies & the fact that an exor. might for a limited purpose have had a right to reach the fund would not in itself be sufficient to take the fund for all purposes away from the persons entitled in default of appointment (ROMER, J.).—Re BOYD, KELLY v. ing £1,100 to D. “in satisfaction of a debt to that amount due from me to her.” & she further appointed that, subject as aforesaid, the trustees should pay the whole of the income of the fund to her husband during his life. The husband survived her. There was in fact no debt due from her to D. but there was a debt of £1,100 due from her husband to D., & the evidence satisfied the ct. that, in the appointment of the £1,100 she intended to refer to that debt. She had at her death separate property applicable to the payment of her debts, but that property was insufficient for the purpose by more than £1,100. Some time after her death the husband paid the debt to D.:—Held: the appointment had not failed, but was effective, & the £1,100 must be applied in payment of the debts of testatrix.—Re HODGSON, DARLEY v. my debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, unto H." H. died before testatrix. Testatrix had personal estate of her own, but she had no real estate:—Held: testatrix had by her will exercised the power for all purposes & had blended the settlement funds with her own property, & the appointed fund, so far as it had lapsed by the death of H., went, subject to the payment thereof of her debts & funeral & testamentary expenses & her pecuniary legacies, to her next of kin, & not to the persons entitled under the settlement in default of appointment.—*Re MARTEN, SHAW v. 653. — Trustees of settlement also executors of appointor.—This is a clear case in which testatrix has appointed the fund in question, & has clearly not tried or intended to make it her own. The persons whom she has appointed to be the exors. of her will are, it is true, the present surviving trustees of the will of her husband, & on this it has been sought to show an intention that any unappointed part of the fund shall belong to her estate. But she directs & appoints that the trustees of her husband's will for the time being shall hold the fund upon the trusts of her husband's will. There is no blending of the funds or attempt to deal with the funds as part of her estate. The share which has lapsed must devolve as in default of appointment & the legacies given by the will of testatrix must be paid out of her own estate (SWINFEN RADY, J.).—*Re (REED, THOMAS v. 654. Whether property falls into residue of appointor—Appointee predeceasing appointor.—Testator directed that, in case of one of his daughters having no child, his trustees should stand possessed of a sum of £3,000 & the stock upon which it should be invested, including the accumulations of the surplus dividends which should not have been applied in manner in the will mentioned, during the daughter's minority, upon such trusts as the daughter should by will appoint, & in default of appointment, or in case of appointment, as to such parts of the £3,000 as should not be effectually comprised therein, or whereof the trusts to be thereby limited should either never take effect, or should determine, upon the trusts by his will declared of his own residuary estate. The daughter, having no child, by her will, after reciting that the £3,000 & the accumulated dividends had been blended with funds to which she was absolutely entitled in a sum of £6,700 Consols, standing in the names of trustees, proceeded, in express execution of the power, to direct that the £3,000, & the stock upon which that sum or the surplus dividends should have been invested, should be transferred to certain trustees named in her will, upon trust, as to £2,700 Consols for her mother, & as to £250 Consols for another person, & as to the residue, upon the trusts after declared of her residuary estate. She then proceeded to give what she described as "all the residue of my stock in the public funds, & all my moneys, & securities for money, & all the residue of my estate & effects," to the same trustees, upon trust to convert & to invest in the funds such part as should not already be so invested, & to stand possessed of all such funds, & also of the residue of the trust funds which should remain after paying & satisfying the several legacies of stock before directed to be paid or transferred thereout to her mother & the other person referred to, upon certain trusts which she proceeded to declare. The mother died in the daughter's lifetime:—Held: the £2,700 Consols was not well appointed, & it was subject to the trusts declared by testator of his residuary estate.—*EASUM v. 658. ———.—*By a marriage settlement, dated in 1863, after reciting that B., the wife, was "seised of or otherwise well entitled to" the freeholds therein described, subject to the life estate of J., & that she was entitled to leasehold premises & certain personal estate, the freeholds were conveyed to trustees, subject to the life estate of J., & the leaseholds & the personal estate were assigned to them, upon trust as to £10,000 for B. for life, & afterwards for A., the husband, for life, & subject thereto, as to all the realty & personalty, as B. should appoint, & in default in trust for B. for life, & if she should predecease her husband, in trust as to the realty for her heirs, & as to the personalty for her next of kin, as if she had died unmarried. The settlement contained the usual covenant for further assurance. At the date of the settlement it was believed that B. was entitled to the entirety of the freeholds & leaseholds, subject to the life estate of J., whereas she was entitled to only thirteen-sixteenths thereof, & J. was then, & to the time of his death, entitled to three-sixteenths. J. died in 1866, having by his will given his property to B. B. made her will in 1880, & in exercise of the powers in the settlement, & of every other power, gave all the freeholds & leaseholds comprised in the settlement to W. & T. P. equally; & she gave all the rest of her personal estate to trustees to pay the income to her husband for life, & afterwards to divide such estate equally between P., W., & T. She declared that her exors. should have power to sell her real & personal estate. B. made a codicil in 1880, revoking the gift of any moneys or other properties which she should have accumulated from or purchased with the income of the property comprised in the settlement or the corpus of any property not included in the settlement & otherwise acquired, & giving the same to her husband. T. died in B.'s lifetime, without issue. The questions were, who was entitled to the share of the residuary personal estate, the gift of which lapsed by the death of T.; who was entitled to the three-sixteenths of the freeholds; & who was entitled to the interest in such three-sixteenths, the gift of which lapsed by the death of T.:—Held: B. had made the personal estate which was included in the residuary gift part of her own assets, & so far as it lapsed, it passed to her next of kin, as though at her death it had belonged to her absolutely.—*Re HORTON, HORTON v. L. died shortly after the marriage still an infant without children & intestate. L. was an illegitimate child, therefore there was no one who could take under the ultimate trust in default of children:—Held: the effect of L.'s execution in the settlement of the power given by her will was to make the property part of her estate for all purposes, & not only so far as to carry out the trusts of the settlement, & the persons entitled under the settlement having failed, the property belonged to her husband.—*Re SCOTT, SCOTT v. #### B. Abatement.

(a) Appointment of Insufficient Fund in Aliquot Shares.

Abatement generally.]—See EXECUTORS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 416–427, Nos. 4880–4981.

683. Shares abate ratably.]—Mrs. C. had a power to appoint three sums of £10,000 each, the first, under her father's will, amongst her children; the second, under her mother's will, to any person; & the third, also under her mother's will, amongst her children. In 1830 the second sum was appointed to her husband, & paid to him. In 1838 the legacy duty was paid on the third sum, which reduced it to £9,900. In 1842 she purported to appoint the two sums of £10,000 under her mother's will to her two daughters equally; & in 1843 she, by her will, appointed £9,900, described as derived from her father, to her daughter, A. B., & £10,000, also described as settled by her father & mother, to the other daughter C. D., & she confirmed the deeds of 1842, so far as they were valid, & not inconsistent with her will; & declared that, if she had exceeded her powers, her will should have effect under the doctrine of election. The ct. having come to the conclusion that Mrs. C., when she made her will, believed she had the power of appointing £19,900, & appointed £9,900 to A. B., & £10,000 to C. D.:—Held: the doctrine of Page v. Leapingwell (1812), 18 Ves. 463, applied, & as testatrix had then only the power of appointing the first sum of £10,000, it must be divided between the two legatees in the proportion of 99 to 100.—LAURIE v. CLUTTON (1851), 15 Beav. 65; 51 E. R. 460.

684. Effect of lapse of one share—Other shares entitled to benefit.]—The donee of a testamentary power of appointment over a fund of £7,000 exercised the power by appointing sums of £1,995, £4,000, £4,000, & £5, amounting in all to £10,000. The appointee of one of the sums of £4,000 died in testator's lifetime:—Held: the other appointees, & not the persons who would take in default of appointment, were entitled to the benefit of the lapse.—*EALLES v. R. then appointed in like manner further sums, making an aggregate of £37,000 Consols, in trust for the four nieces & nephew named; & the residue of the two several sums of Consols or other the stocks, funds, or securities, etc., in trust for his niece C. The trust funds at the death of R. were insufficient to pay the £37,000 Consols:—Held: the gift to C. was residuary & not specific, & it failed altogether.—DE LISLE v. HODGES (1874), L. The will disposed of no other property except that subject to the power, & contained no direction for payment of testamentary expenses, probate or legacy duty:—Held: the testamentary expenses & probate duty, & the legacy duty on the specified portions of the trust funds, must be paid out of that part of the trust funds which was lastly appointed as residue.

(c) Successive Appointments of Insufficient Fund.

691. Loss borne by latest appointees.]—(1) A donee of a power affecting two sums of stock of different descriptions appointed a gross amount, part of one of them, & exceeding one-fourth part of it. Afterwards she executed, successively, deeds purporting to appoint aliquot parts of both funds as one subject, & without noticing the previous appointment of the gross sum, which was never severed from the mass. The appointees comprised all the parties entitled, subject to the appointment, & the aliquot parts so appointed amounted to four-fifths, thus exceeding, with the earliest appointment, the entirety of one of the funds:—Held: the successive appointments of the aliquot parts operated upon aliquot parts of the whole of each fund, & therefore, the loss arising from the deficiency of the one fund fell upon the last appointees.

(2) The costs of the suit occasioned by the above circumstances were directed to be apportioned between the two funds, & the amount payable by each fund apportioned between the several interests in that fund; but wherever a share had been sold or incumbered, the additional costs occasioned by such sale or incumbrance were to be borne by that particular share.—*TROLLOPE v. children, irrevocably appointed £500 to his daughter B., & subject to revocation, appointed the £5,500 residue to his daughter C. By a subsequent deed the appointment of £5,500 was revoked, & the hereditaments subject to the power were charged with £1,600 to C. & £3,900 to B., in lieu of the £5,500 charged by the first deed, & "subject & without prejudice to the trusts for raising the £500," trusts for raising the £1,600 & £3,900 were declared. This deed contained a power of revocation & new appointment, confined, however, to the £3,900. By a subsequent deed the appointment of £3,900 was revoked & that sum was appointed between B. & C. in the proportions of £300 to B. & £3,600 to C., in addition to the sums of £500 & £1,600 then respectively remaining charged thereon, & it was directed that all the sums raisable under the trusts of the term under the three deeds should be charged & chargeable on the property pari passu & without priority:—Held: the £500 irrevocably appointed by the first deed had priority over the other charges, & this priority was unaffected by the direction that the charges should rank pari passu & without priority; & accordingly, subject to any question as to election, the £500 had priority, & the several charges amounting to £5,500 stood subsequent to the £500, but inter se ranked pari passu.

Where under a power to appoint a definite fund among special objects an appointment is made of aliquot parts of the fund, or of parts of the fund exhausting the whole by one instrument, or by several instruments, which form one transaction & ought to be construed together, there primâ facie there is no priority, & the several parts of the fund, if the fund proves deficient, must abate ratably.

Where under a like power several sums are appointed by successive independent deeds, there primâ facie the sums or parts appointed, not being aliquot parts, have priority according to the dates of the deeds (CHITTY, J.).—WILSON v. KENRICK (1885), 31 Ch. D. 658; 55 L. J. Ch. 525; 54 L. T. 461; 2 T. L. R. 214.

By his will he, in exercise of the power of appointment given to him by the will of his aunt M., appointed the sum of £5 to be paid out of his share of the trust funds, subject to the said will, to each of his children who should survive him, except his son P., & he appointed the remainder of his share to his son P. absolutely; & testator gave & bequeathed all the other property of every description belonging to him, or of which he should have power to dispose by his will, to his son P. for his own use, but subject to the payment of testator's debts, funeral & testamentary expenses. P. survived his father. The question was raised whether the will of T. operated as an exercise of the power of appointment given to him by the will of M. as regarded an accrued as well as his original share of the trust fund:—Held: the will operated as an appointment of the accrued share.—Re DENTON, BANNERMAN v. The daughter by her will recited verbatim the gift in the father's will, & then, in exercise of the power, appointed that "the said sum of £30,000, together with the interest & the annual proceeds thereof, by the said will of my father to be held in trust for me, my children & grandchildren, & over which I have such power of appointment as aforesaid," should after her death be held by the trustees of her father's will upon trust as to £1,000 "part thereof" for her daughter E.; upon trust as to five sums of £1,000, £4,000, £6,000, £6,000, & £3,000 respectively, each of which was described as "other part of the said sum of £30,000," on trust for five others of her children, respectively, & upon trust as to another sum of £6,000, which was described as "the residue of the said sum of £30,000" for her other child. At the time of her death the securities on which the £30,000 had been invested were worth £39,000:—Held: testatrix was dealing with the fund as an invested fund, & that the whole of it was appointed in the proportions indicated by her will.—Re CRUDDAS, CRUDDAS v. settled upon trust for the wife for life, & after her death, in the events which happened, upon trust for the husband for life, or until he should become bkpt. & subject as aforesaid the trustees were to hold the said sum & the income thereof upon trust for the children or other issue of the marriage as the spouses should by deed jointly, or as the survivor should by deed or will, direct & appoint, & in default of appointment for all the children who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry, in equal shares. The wife died in 1905, & in 1906 the husband, who had left for Australia many years before, was adjudicated bkpt. There were three children of the marriage, all of whom had attained twenty-one, & one of them was married & had three infant children. The daughter appointed by deed the whole of the fund amongst her children giving pltf., who was one of them, a specified sum for her separate use absolutely. Pltf. after the death of her grandfather, & before the date of the appointment by her mother, married a Frenchman domiciled in France. He died before the date of the appointment, & there was one child only of the marriage. There was no settlement on the marriage, & the French law of community applied, under which the child became entitled in the absence of any contrary declaration by the donor, to half the property acquired by her mother during the marriage:—Held: pltf. must be considered to have acquired the appointed fund from the date of the appointment only, & the fund not having been acquired during the marriage, did not become subject to the law of community; the fact of the gift being expressed to be for the separate use was a sufficient declaration to exclude the law of community.—*DE SERRE v. There was issue of the marriage two children only, a son & a daughter. The daughter married, & by her marriage settlement she & her intended husband covenanted with the trustees for the conveyance & settlement of all property which she then was "seised of, or interested in, or entitled to," upon the trusts therein mentioned, including in effect reversionary interests. The daughter survived her husband, & thereupon H. by deed appointed the real estate comprised in the original settlement, subject to his life estate, to his son & daughter equally in fee, the daughter thus taking the same share as she would have taken, in default of appointment:—Held: inasmuch as the reversionary moiety appointed to the daughter constituted a new interest acquired by her subsequently to the date of her settlement, such moiety was not bound by the covenant in her marriage settlement.—*SWEETAPPLE v. She married in Jan. 1892, being then entitled under the settlement made on the marriage of her father & mother, dated Apr. 15, 1874, subject to the exercise by her mother of the power of appointment contained in that settlement in favour of the issue of the marriage, & to her mother's life interest to the property comprised in the settlement. By a voluntary settlement dated July 27, 1892, after reciting that the property comprised in the settlement of Apr. 15, 1874, was vested in trustees upon trust to pay the income to pltf.'s mother for life, & upon her death upon trust for pltf., her heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, pltf. conveyed all her reversionary property under the settlement of Apr. 15, 1874, to trustees upon trust for conversion & to pay the income to herself for life, then to her husband for life, & on the death of the survivor, on the usual trusts for the benefit of their issue, with a trust in default of issue in favour of pltf. The settlement contained no covenant to settle after-acquired property, & no power of revocation. In Aug. 1897, pltf.'s mother, in exercise of the power contained in the settlement of Apr. 15, 1874, irrevocably appointed that the trustees of that settlement should stand possessed of the property therein comprised in trust for pltf., her exors., administrators, & assigns absolutely. There was no issue of the marriage between pltf. & her husband:—Held: the deed of July 27, 1892, only passed the interest which pltf. held under the deed of Apr. 15, 1874, & did not comprise the interest taken by her under the appointment.—*LOVETT v. There were only two children who attained twenty-one. One of them, C., by an antenuptial agreement, agreed to settle "all her half or other share & interest whatsoever" in the property subject to the trusts of the original settlement. The agreement provided that the settlement should contain certain specified provisions, & generally such other agreements, clauses, & provisions as were "usually inserted in settlements of a like kind." M. & his wife, who predeceased him, made no joint appointment under the deed of 1854, but by his will, in exercise of his power, he appointed the sum of £2,000 to C. absolutely:—Held: a covenant to settle after-acquired property was not a "usual" clause in settlements of a like kind with that to be executed in accordance with the agreement for a settlement, & the £2,000 was not bound by the agreement.—*Re MADDY'S ESTATE, MADDY v. By a subsequent deed the settlor & his son, in exercise of the power of appointment in the settlement, jointly appointed the estate to the son in fee. On an information claiming succession duty:—Held: the son took the estate by a new title under the deed of appointment, & not by a succession the title to which had been accelerated by the surrender or extinction of any prior interest within Succession Duty Act, 1853 (c. 51), s. 15, & succession duty was not payable.—*A.-G. v. The son died under the age of forty, without having assigned his share, leaving a will of which B. was exor. After the death of S., L. & N. were appointed exors. of the original settlement. trust after the death of the survivor of the husband & wife "to pay & transfer the said hereditaments & premises" to the children of the marriage as the survivor of the husband & wife should appoint. The settlement contained powers for the trustees to sell the property during the lives of the husband & wife & the survivor & during the lifetime of any child. The husband survived his wife & by his will appointed the property to trustees on trust for sale & conversion & directed them to stand possessed of the proceeds upon a series of complicated trusts for the benefit of his children. The trustees of the will purporting to act under the trust for sale therein contained contracted to sell the property. The purchaser took the objection that the proper persons to sell were the representatives of the last surviving trustee of the settlement:—Held: inasmuch as the trustees of the settlement were directed to "pay & transfer" the property to the appointees the trust for sale by the trustees of the will was expressly authorised by the terms of the power & overrode the powers of sale contained in the settlement; the trustees of the will were therefore the proper persons to sell the property & could call for a conveyance of the legal estate.—Re ADAMS' TRUSTEES' & FROST'S CONTRACT, [1907] 1 Ch. 695; 76 L. He afterwards married & died without having made a fresh will. It was admitted that by virtue of the Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 18, the will was revoked as to general estate, but was not revoked so far as it was an exercise of the power. Testator's son was a person of unsound mind not so found, & a receiver of his estate had been appointed in Lunacy. This action was brought by testator's widow, claiming administration. The son, who was his sole next of kin, was made deft. & appeared by the receiver. The receiver claimed that the administration should be granted to him for the use of the son:—Held: the grant must be made to the widow, but must be a general grant of administration with so much only of the will annexed as related to the appointed fund, not a grant of administration limited to the appointed fund. The costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of the whole estate, including the appointed fund.—In the Estate of POOLE, POOLE v. POOLE, [1919] P. 10; 88 L. J. P. 77; *sub nom. The husband died without exercising the joint power of appointment, & the wife made several successive appointments in favour of certain of her children, & appointed the residue in favour of another child. The wife having died, & an action having been brought for the administration of the trusts of the settlement, & it appearing that the appointees had assigned, in some cases to two or three persons, & incumbered their shares:—Held: the costs must be borne ratably by the appointed shares, one set of costs to be allowed to each child in respect of the several appointments to him, the several assignees of such appointments to stand on the same footing, & to divide the costs allowed in respect of such child's share ratably between them.—*Re HILL'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, HILL v. of her separate personality, the quality of separate property ceases, & the right of the husband to such undisposed of personality accrues as if the separate use had never existed. A married woman who had a power of appointment over certain trust funds, & was also possessed of separate estate her title to which had accrued before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), died in 1887, having in the same year made a will, by which she exercised her power of appointment over the trust fund & appointed exors., but made no disposition of her separate property. Probate of the will was granted to the exors. according to the altered practice introduced by the Probate Rules of 1887, i.e. in the ordinary form without any exception or limitation:—Held: the expenses of proving the will, including the probate duty, must be apportioned ratably between the appointed & undisposed of property in the same manner in which they would have been apportioned under a grant caterorum before the change in the form of the grant: but the costs of the proceedings in which the questions were determined must fall upon the undisposed of property, as they were occasioned by a contest between the husband & the next of kin.—*Re LAMBERT'S ESTATE, STANTON v. 785. — —.]—By a marriage settlement, made in 1841, funds amounting to £100,000 or thereabouts were settled upon trusts to invest in land to be conveyed to the use of the husband for life, with remainder, in the events which happened, subject to certain terms of years for raising portions & other sums to the amount of £40,000 to such uses as the wife should by will appoint. The wife died in Nov. 1886, having by her will appointed £35,000 out of the fund to A., & subject thereto the residue to other persons. The husband died in Dec. 1894, after the passing of the Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30). The fund had never been invested in land. It was admitted that the fund became liable to estate duty on the death of the husband, & that the trustees of the settlement were bound to pay it in the first instance. Several summonses were taken out relating to the property comprised in the settlement, raising, amongst others, the question how, as between the appointees of the £35,000 & the residue, the estate duty & the costs of the summonses were to be borne:—Held: according to the general practice of the ct., the costs of administration of an appointed fund, & therefore of the summonses in this case, must be borne ratably by all the appointed shares, & not thrown on the residue.—Re ORFORD (COUNTRESS), CARTWRIGHT v. DEL BALZO (DUC), [1896] 1 Ch. 257; 65 L. J. Ch. 253; 44 W. R. 383; sub nom. Re ORFORD (EARL), NEVILLE v. CARTWRIGHT, CARTWRIGHT v. DEL BALZO (DUC), 73 L. T. 681.

The fund was not sufficient to provide for the appointment of the full sum of £10,000 to the fourth daughter. 808. — Power of revocation reserved to one alone.—By the settlement made on a marriage a sum of £10,000 was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the income to the husband during his life; with remainder to the wife during her life or until she should marry again; with remainder, as to the capital, in trust for the issue of the marriage, as the husband & wife should by deed with or without power of revocation & new appointment, jointly appoint &, in default of appointment, as the survivor should by deed or will appoint, &, in default of appointment, for the children of the marriage as therein mentioned; but if there should be only one child who should attain twenty-one or marry, as to one moiety of the trust fund in trust for that only child, & as to the other moiety upon the trusts thereafter declared of the whole fund in case there should be no child of the marriage; & if there should be no child of the marriage, the trustees were, after the determination of the prior trusts & the default of children, which should last happen, to hold the fund in trust for the husband. The decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage was made on Nov. 3, 1886. On May 11, 1887, the husband & wife executed a deed by which, in exercise of the joint power contained in the settlement, they irrevocably appointed that, from & after the death of the husband & the death or re-marriage of the wife, one moiety of the trust fund should be held in trust for R., the eldest of the three children, absolutely, if & when she should attain twenty-one or marry under that age; & by the same deed the husband & wife appointed the other moiety of the fund to R. in the same way, but subject to a power of revocation & new appointment reserved to the husband alone. On May 18, 1887, the day after the decree absolute, another deed was executed by the husband & the divorced wife by which she released her life interest in the trust fund in the event of her surviving the husband, & she also renounced & released to him all power of appointment over the fund. On Nov. 30, 1887, the husband executed a deed poll by which he absolutely revoked the appointment of the second moiety of the trust fund to R. to the intent that the moiety might devolve as if that appointment had not been made, but subject to any appointment to be thereafter made by him. The husband claimed a declaration that the trustees of the settlement ought to treat a moiety of the £10,000 as if there were no child of the marriage:—Held: the reservation in the deed of May 11, 1887, of a power of revocation to the husband alone was invalid, & he was not entitled to call on the trustees to hand over a moiety of the £10,000 to him.—BURNABY v. BAILLIE (1889), 42 Ch. D. 282; 58 L. J. Ch. 842; 61 L. T. 634; 38 W. R. 125; 5 T. L. R. 556.

There were two sons of this marriage; & by a deed, dated 1832, H. & M., in exercise of the joint power, appointed the hereditaments, subject to their own life estates, to their youngest son, deft., in fee, subject to a power for them jointly by deed to revoke such appointment, & by the same or any other deed to be by them jointly executed to limit or appoint any other uses in favour of their children which might be warranted by the several powers contained in the settlement of 1810. By a deed of Feb. 4, 1833, H. & M. jointly revoked the uses contained in the deed of 1832, but made no new appointment. On Feb. 19, 1833, M. died & in the following month of May, H. by will, did, in execution of the powers vested in him, direct limit & appoint the hereditaments to deft. in fee:—Held: the effect of the revocation of the joint appointment was to restore the uses of the original settlement, including the joint & several powers of appointment, & consequently that the appointment by the will of H. was a valid exercise of the power by the survivor, & deft. was entitled to the property.—*MONTAGU v. 814. ———.]—(1) If there is an original power of appointment, & then an execution of that power, reserving a power only to revoke, followed by a revocation, the original power remains unaffected. & if in the first instrument, executing the original power, there is reserved a power of revocation & of new appointment, such instrument does not constitute a new settlement destructive of the first, nor is the original power thereby exhausted & at an end, but, upon the revocation of such instrument, exists in full force.

(2) If there is a power of appointment to be exercised by deed or will, & the first instrument executing the power is a deed which contains the reservation of a power to revoke & to appoint anew by deed, & then there is a simple revocation of this instrument, the original power, on such revocation, being in full force, there may be a valid execution of it by will as well as by deed.

In 1794, an estate in land was made the subject of a settlement, under which two persons then about to be married were to have life interests, remainder to the use of such person for such estate, etc., as A., the intended wife, by any deed, with or without power of revocation, attested by two or more witnesses, or by will attested by three witnesses, should from time to time, & as often as she should think fit, appoint. In 1830, A. by deed exercised this power, & the deed contained a power, by deed, to revoke & to make a new appointment. In 1833, a deed revoking that of 1830, & newly appointing, & also reserving power, by deed, to revoke & newly appoint, was executed. This course was exactly repeated in 1835 by a deed of that date. In 1836, A. executed another deed, simply revoking that of 1835. In 1848, by a will reciting the power of 1794, A. declared the uses of the estate:—Held: the deed of 1830 had not exhausted the power of 1794, & substituted a new power for it, to be executed only by deed; & consequently on the revocation, in 1836, of the last preceding deed, the power of 1794 was capable of being exercised by A. either by deed or will.—*SAUNDERS v. By her will the daughter, in exercise of her power, appointed the real estate to trustees in trust for sale & to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trusts for her children:—Held: the legal estate was well appointed by the daughter's will to her trustees in trust for sale, & they were therefore the proper persons to sell.

An appointment of real estate under a power to trustees for objects of the power passes the legal estate in it as effectively as if the property appointed were money instead of land.—Re PAGET, Re MELLOR, MELLOR v. MELLOR, [1898] 1 Ch. 290; 67 L. J. Ch. 151; 78 L. T. 72; 46 W. R. 328.

The father afterwards appointed the estate to trustees & their heirs, upon trust to pay the rents & profits thereof to his daughter, who was a married woman, for her sole & separate use during the life of her husband, without power of anticipation:—Held: the appointment of the estate to trustees for the separate use of the daughter during the joint lives of herself & her husband was a valid exercise of the power.—*THORNTON v. The intention was to enable the trustees of the settlement to sell any part of the land free from portions charged on the estate by the tenant for life:—Held: the tenants for life & in remainder having power to appoint to new uses, the deed poll operated as a due exercise of such power, & therefore the trustees of the settlement had power to sell the lands the subject of a certain contract free from portions.—Re MCAULIFFE & BALFOUR (1884), 50 L. By a deed of Mar. 10, 1855, Mr. & Mrs. P., in exercise of the power conferred by the deed of Sept. 5, & of every power & authority enabling them in that behalf, appointed the property successively to themselves for life, & after the death of the survivor to the use of their son E. for life, with remainder to his children & remoter issue as he should appoint, & with a power of jointuring, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in fee:—Held: assuming the

The daughters were both married, & the widow appointed that, after her decease, one moiety should go to such uses as one of the daughters, & as to the other moiety, to such uses as the other daughter should appoint, & in default of appointment, to them absolutely. By a settlement dated the following day, each daughter appointed her moiety to her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband, for life, with remainder to her children, with cross limitations:—Held: the appointment & settlements were

833. Appointment to child for life with power of appointment by will—Objects in esse at date of creation of power.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for all or such one or more exclusive of the others of the children of his niece, as she should by her will appoint; & in default of appointment, in trust for all her children living at his decease. The niece by her will appointed £6,000, part of the stock, to her daughter, for her separate use for life; & after her death, to such persons, etc., as the daughter should by will appoint, & in default of appointment, to the niece's two sons. The two sons & the daughter were the niece's only children, & they were all living at testator's death. After the death of the niece, her two sons & daughter & the husband of the daughter executed a deed by which, after reciting that it was conceived that the testamentary power of appointment given to the daughter was invalid, as being an excessive execution of the power given to her mother, & that it was also conceived that, if that power should be valid & should not be exercised, then & in either event the reversion of the £6,000 expectant on the daughter's death, belonged to her two brothers & to herself & her husband; the parties, in order to obviate any doubts respecting the same & to carry their mother's intention into effect, assigned the fund to two trustees, in trust for the daughter, for her separate use for life, & after her death, for the husband for life, & after his death, for the children of the daughter & her husband, & if they should all die under twenty-one, in trust for the daughter's next of kin; & the daughter alone was empowered to appoint new trustees of the deed. A few months afterwards the daughter made a will, in exercise of the power given to her by her mother, & appointed the fund to her husband absolutely. Some time afterwards she executed a deed, by which she appointed a new trustee of the prior deed. Shortly afterwards she died, leaving her husband & four children surviving:—Held: the testamentary power of appointment given to the daughter was valid, the first deed was not intended to operate, unless that power should be either void or not exercised, the daughter's will was a good execution of the power, & was not revoked by the second deed.—PHIPSON v. But an appointment to child A. upon a certain contingency, & if that contingency should not happen, then the same share to go to child B., is a good conditional limitation under the power. So it is, if the event on which the shifting limitation is to take effect be some act to be done by A., if such act be consistent with the scope of the power; as of the limitation over be to take effect if A. do not, upon the request in writing of the appointor, make over another fund derived from a different source to the other objects of the power; for this is consistent with the intention of the power, which was that the donee should, according to his view of the exigencies of the objects of the power, appoint the whole fund to all of them, or to some only in exclusion of the others.

If the condition be in form that A. should do this upon the request not only of the appointor, but of his exors. or administrators, it will be construed as if the limitation were inserted in the instrument creating the power; & where that provides that the appointment must be made so as to take effect within twenty-one years after the death of the appointor the condition will be valid.—STROUD v. 855. ———.—*Under a marriage settlement made in 1820, a father had a power of appointment among his children. He afterwards borrowed the funds subject to the power, amounting to £6,000, from the trustees of the settlement, on the security of a freehold estate which was his own property. On the marriage of his only daughter in 1853, the father settled a sum of £3,000 upon her out of his own property. In 1863, the father executed three deeds of even date. By the first, he made a voluntary settlement of the freehold estate with some other property on his eldest son, E., for his life, with remainder for the benefit of E.'s children or remoter issue, as E. should appoint, & in default of appointment, to E.'s children equally, & in default of children, to himself in fee. By a second deed, the father appointed the whole of the £6,000 under his marriage settlement to E. absolutely; & the same deed contained a release by the father & his wife, & also by E. & the surviving trustee of the settlement, of the mtge. debt of £6,000, & a conveyance by the same parties of the freehold estate discharged from the mtge. to the uses of the voluntary settlement of even date. By a third deed, the father gave the residue of his property to his only other son, R. The father made his will, bearing the same date, & thereby confirmed the three deeds of even date, & charged his ultimate remainder under the first deed with £3,000, in favour of his only daughter, M., & subject thereto, gave the same to R. The father died in 1864. E., although made a party to the two first-mentioned deeds of even date, was not consulted on their preparation, & he at first refused to execute them, but he did in fact execute them in the year 1871:—Held: (1) in the opinion of the Ct. the arrangement by which the mtge. debt of £6,000 had been released & the ultimate remainder reserved to the father had not been made for the purpose of benefiting the appointor; & the appointment was not fraudulent or invalid; (2) the condition annexed to the appointment, that E. should release the estate from the mtge. debt, was not binding upon E. until he assented to the arrangement; & he might have claimed the benefit of the absolute appointment in his favour discharged from the condition, but that, having executed the deeds, he had by his voluntary act assented to be bound by the conditions.*

*By an agreement the children, none of whom were emancipated, agreed to assign on the death of J. V. a portion of the fund for the benefit of the wife & children of the second marriage. By his will & codicil J. V. gave the funds to one child only, subject to annuities to the others, & to a request to settle £100 a year on the wife & children of the second marriage:—Held: (1) the above-mentioned agreement was not enforceable; (2) the exclusion of the two children from sharing in the corpus was not, but the request to settle the £100 a year, was done with a view to divert the funds, & accordingly, the appointment was bad only to the extent of the request to settle the £100 a year.—VIAIT v. COOPER (1897), 76 L. T. 768.*

857. ———.—In cases where a power of appointment is exercised in favour of an object of the power, but conditions in favour of persons who are not objects of the power are imposed on the appointee, the difficulty in deciding the question whether the conditions are to be disregarded or render the appointment itself void is one of fact or of inference rather than of law; the law being that if there is a genuine appointment to an object of the power, coupled with an attempt to impose on the appointment conditions or trusts in favour of persons who are not objects, the appointment stands good free from the conditions, whereas if there is no genuine appointment to an object of the power, but the appointment to that object is made for purposes foreign to the power, then the whole appointment fails, whether the real purposes of the appointment have or have not been communicated to, & assented to by, the nominal appointee.

*Under the will of her father a lady had power by will or codicil to appoint that all or any part of the income of certain funds, which was £600 or £700 per annum, should after her death be paid to her husband for life, & upon such conditions & with such restrictions as she should think fit. On her marriage with C. she had settled £3,000 of her own upon trust for herself for life, & then in the events which happened, upon such trusts as she should by will or deed appoint. By her will, in exercise of the power under her father's will, she appointed that after her death the income of the funds thereunder should be paid to C. during his life for his absolute use provided he should acquiesce in the several dispositions contained in her will, & so long as he should pay to each of her nieces W. & F. the sum of £50 annually; & she thereby, in exercise of the power under the settlement, appointed that her trustees should out of the settled funds raise & pay her debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, & pecuniary legacies, & pay the residue thereof to her nephews & nieces; & she gave the residue of her personal estate, being her "separate estate or over which" she had any power of disposition or appointment to C. By a codicil she revoked the appointment under her father's will to C., & instead thereof appointed that the whole of the income of the fund thereunder should be paid to C. during his life for his absolute use, provided that he should acquiesce in her testamentary dispositions & so long as he should pay to each of her nieces W., F., & H. the clear sum of £100 annually. The Ct. found that testatrix had a genuine desire to benefit C. by the appointment & that this desire was the real motive & object of the appointment:—Held:*

By her will, which recited the power, & stated that she had appointed the greater part of the fund in favour of her daughters, & that the only part remaining unappointed was a sum of £713 Consols, she, in exercise of the power, appointed the £713 Consols to her sons in equal shares, on condition that they should give up all claim to the proceeds of sale of the furniture in a house formerly occupied by her; but, in the event of their making any claim to the furniture, or to the proceeds of sale thereof, then she appointed the £713 Consols to one of her daughters absolutely. She bequeathed the residue of her estate to a person not an object of the power. The furniture, or the proceeds of sale thereof, had been bequeathed to her for life, with remainder to her sons in equal shares. The furniture had been sold for about £700, & the proceeds of sale received by her:—Held: the appointment could not be severed from the condition; it was made for the purpose of increasing the estate for the benefit of the residuary legatee by the amount of the claim which her sons had against her; & consequently, the appointment was void as a fraud on the power.—*Re PERKINS, PERKINS v. 861. Condition inconsistent with power — Condition void.]—A condition annexed to an appointment, & inconsistent with the power, is void.

Testator, having power to appoint by will a sum of £3,000, made his will, giving his general estate to his children for life, with remainder to their issue; & after referring to the above power, he appointed the fund amongst his children, & requested them not to spend their shares thereof, but to leave the same for the benefit of their children:—Held: these words did not constitute a trust for the grandchildren, so as to put the children to their election, but they amounted to a condition annexed to the appointment in favour of children, & such condition was void, as inconsistent with the power.—*BLACKET v. The fact that other trusts are added which are not within the power cannot affect the validity of those which are within it. If you appoint the fund entirely to one or more persons who are objects of the power, that is a good execution of the power, & if you choose to add that they shall be trustees for other objects of the power, that is within the scope of such a power as this (GIFFARD, V.-C.).—*WILSON v. ##### (a) Appointment to Objects and Strangers.

868. Gifts severable—Appointment to stranger void.—ALEXANDER v. ALEXANDER, No. 177, ante.

869. ———.—(1) The question whether a will operates as an execution of a power is, like all questions upon the construction of wills, purely a question of intention.

By a marriage settlement, four different portions of property were limited in the following manner : first, the wife was given a general power of appointment over £3,000 to take effect upon her own death ; secondly, the wife had a special power of appointment over the residue of the stocks & funds, to be exercised in favour of a particular class of relations, & to take effect, not upon her own death, but upon the death of her husband ; thirdly, the wife had a general power of appointment over the plate, furniture, etc., but not to take effect until her husband's death ; fourthly, the wife had a general power to dispose of her jewels, trinkets, etc., to take effect upon her own death. The wife's will, which was dated before Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), & was properly executed in the form prescribed for the execution of the powers in the settlement, commenced, ' I, S. M., do, by virtue of the power & authority reserved to me by my marriage settlement, hereby make, publish & declare this to be my last will & testament.'

Testatrix then referred specially to her power of appointing the £3,000, & disposed of it. The third & fourth portions of the property she disposed of without referring to her power. Lastly, she gave & bequeathed, directed & appointed all the rest, residue & remainder of her moneys, & other her personal estate, of whatsoever description, amongst the class of relations pointed out by the settlement, but did not refer to the power. As to the first, third & fourth portions, no question was raised ; but as to the second portion, being the residue :—Held : the will was a good execution of the power.

(3) Although the fund was appointed not entirely to objects of the power, but partly to objects of the power & partly to strangers, the appointment was nevertheless valid pro tanto, that is, it was valid quoad those who were objects of the power, & invalid as to those persons who were not properly objects of the power.

When an appointment is to a class, some of whom are within & others are not within the proper limits of the power, if the class of persons is ascertained, so that you can point to A., who is within the limits, & say so much is to go to him, though the others are not within the limits, yet the appointment to A. shall take effect ; but if the appointment is to a class, some of whom may, & others may not be objects of the power, & there is nothing to point out what portion is to go to those who are within the power, & what to those who are not, the whole fails (KINDERLEY, V.-C.).—*HARVEY v. At the date of the appointment the daughter had three children living, including one en ventre sa mère, & she had three born afterwards. One of the children had attained twenty-one, & the rest were minors:—Held: (1) issue in existence at the date of the deed of appointment were the only objects of the power; (2) upon the construction of the deed the intention of the appointor was to include non-objects, i.e. issue born after that date; (3) the appointment was not thereby bad in toto; (4) the share of each object would be determined by the total number of objects & non-objects who should fall within the class in whose favour the appointment purported to be made. The wife died. There were two daughters. The father by will reciting the purchase, & that he had not conveyed it to the uses of the settlement, & that it was not his intention that the said purchase should be an investment of the trust fund, but that the said fund, with its increase, should be taken out of his personal estate, gave £10,000 part of the trust fund, in trust to be laid out in land, to be conveyed to one daughter for life for her separate use; remainder to her children in tail; remainder to the other daughter in fee; for whom he also appointed the residue of the fund, but revoked that by codicil, reciting a portion given on her marriage:—Held: grandchildren are not objects of the power, but the excess only would be void, the fund with its increase was invested in the purchase; there was no appointment of the estate or money due on the covenant; the remainders, in default of appointment, are vested, subject to be divested by appointment, & will take effect as to what is ill appointed or unappointed; the share of the daughter, to whom the portion was advanced on marriage, was thereby satisfied.—*SMITH v. or the money became due, then the share of her so dying to be laid out for the benefit of her exors. One of the daughters died after the appointment, & before the time of payment. This is a good appointment to the daughters themselves, & the appointment to exors. is void; but as one of the appointees died before time of payment, her share sinks into the estate. The joint appointment having appointed the whole, the share of the daughter who died is not the subject of any further appointment.—BROWN v. NISBETT (1750), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 13; 29 E. R. 1040, L. M., in the lifetime of her husband, & then having two sons, made a will, by which she appointed the estate to her elder son J. & his heirs & assigns for ever, on condition that he should pay £200 to W. her second son, within a year of her husband's decease, or on W.'s attaining the age of twenty-one; but in case neither of the sons should be living at the decease of B. her husband, then she gave the estate to her father-in-law, in trust to sell & pay legacies. After the date of the will, four other children were born of the marriage. M. died in the lifetime of her husband; J. the eldest son died in his father's lifetime leaving the lessor of pltf. his youngest son & customary heir; & W. the second son died before his father.—Held: the lessor of pltf. was not entitled to recover. There was an implied dispensation of coverture in the power given to M. Although the appointment was not altogether void, but gave a vested defeasible estate in fee to J. the eldest son, & the appointment over to the father-in-law alone was void, yet that the event which happened defeated & put an end to the estate of J. the son.—*DOE d. A. survived testator, was married, & had one child. Other benefits, out of testator's own property, were given by the will to A. :—Held: no case of election was raised, in favour of the persons not objects of the power, against A.—*BATE v. Under a settlement made on the second marriage of M., a widow, a trust fund belonging to her was vested in a trustee upon trust for her three children, nominalim, in such shares as she should by deed or will appoint, & in default of appointment for such three children equally.—By her will M. appointed that the trustee of the settlement should stand possessed of the trust fund, as to one-third part thereof, upon trust to pay the income thereof to her son C., an object of the power, during his life, or until anticipation; & from & after his death or the determination of his estate, upon trust to pay the said one-third part to her grandson, not an object of the power, when he should attain twenty-one; & in case he should die before he should attain twenty-one, upon trust to pay the said one-third part to her daughter S., an object of the power. C. survived testatrix & died, the grandson being then an infant.—Held: although the appointment to the grandson was void, the appointment over to S. was good, & the income from C.'s death of the one-third so appointed would pass with the capital to S., if the grandson died under twenty-one; but, if that event did not happen, both income & capital would pass under the settlement as in default of appointment.—*LONG v. 918. — —.]—Testator bequeathed his estate to trustees on trust to pay the income to his children in equal shares, & gave power to the trustees to apply "in or towards the advancement in life of each child a sum not exceeding £500 of his or her presumptive share." The trustees were to be the sole judges of the advisability of such payment & of the signification of the term "advancement in life." After the share of a married daughter had become vested, the trustees at her request advanced £250 to her under this power with knowledge that the sum so advanced would be used to pay a debt due from her husband to one of the trustees:—Held: this was not a bonâ fide exercise of the power, & was therefore a breach of trust. Semle: there was no power to make any advance after the share had become vested.—MOLYNEUX v. FLETCHER, [1898] 1 Q. B. 648; 67 L. J. Q. B. 392; 78 L. T. 111; 46 W. R. 576; 14 T. L. R. 211; 42 Sol. Jo. 254.

919. — Advance to pay debts of child.]—Testator, bequeathed a fund upon trust for L. during his life, & after his decease for his children as he should by will appoint, & in default of appointment for his children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, in equal shares. Testator empowered the trustees, at any time or times during the life of L., to apply any part of the fund not exceeding one moiety in or towards the preferment or advancement of L. or otherwise for his benefit as the trustees should in their discretion think fit. At the date of the will L. was thirty years of age, & had been married for nearly three years:—Held: the trustees might apply one moiety of the trust fund in payment of debts incurred by L., the interest on which absorbed nearly the whole of L.'s income, & the principal of which he was unable to pay out of his own resources.—*LOWTHER v. 922. — Prejudice of same appointee taking under later appointment.]—Husband & wife having, by virtue of their marriage settlement a joint power of appointment amongst their children over £6,000, to be paid in such manner & at such times, made a defective appointment, the attestation omitting the word "signed," of it to their daughter, in such manner that the interest should be for life, & the principal should be subject to her disposal by will. The husband died & the wife, who by the settlement had a similar power if she survived, & there had been no joint appointment, subsequently appointed the said sum unto her daughter absolutely:—Held: the trustees should convey the £6,000 to the daughter absolutely, for the ct. would not aid a defective appointment, which would be to the prejudice of the same appointee who took under both appointments.—HARE v. LEACH (1843), 7 Jur. 120.

etc., whereof no such direction or appointment should be made, upon trust, to receive the annual proceeds due, & to grow due, for or in respect of the same, & pay the same to such persons as the wife, during her life, notwithstanding her coverture, & whether sole or covert, should from time to time, by any writing or writings under her hand, direct or appoint to receive the same, & in default of such direction or appointment into the proper hands of the wife for her separate use. The moneys in the funds were transferred to the husband by virtue of powers of attorney, under the hand & seal of the wife, with the consent of the husband under his hand & seal, & attested by two witnesses; & the mtge. money was received & a receipt given by the husband & wife, & the premises reconveyed, & the receipt & reconveyance also so attested:—Held: (1) the powers of attorney were not directions, but were merely authorities to the bankers by the wife to assign the stock to her husband, & only enabled the bankers to do for her what she might have done for herself, without their intervention. As the directions must follow on the authorities before the authorities could be acted on, it still remained to make the appointment after the execution of the powers of attorney, & the transfers made subsequently to such execution, being unaccompanied by any of the formalities required by the settlement, could not have the effect of converting instruments of substitution into instruments of alienation, & could not operate as executions of the power of appointment; (2) the wife had no power to dispose of the trust funds otherwise than by a perfect appointment; (3) in order to constitute a purchaser in whose favour a defective execution of a power will be aided in equity, there must be a consideration & an intention to purchase, either proved or to be presumed; & the maintenance of his household & establishment by the husband does not furnish such consideration to the wife.—*HUGHES v. She died in Mar. 1870, after two days' illness:—Held: her intention to appoint the property by this memorandum was sufficiently clear, & the ct. would give effect to the memorandum as an execution of the power.—*KENNARD v. Upon the marriage of B. to C. this bond was assigned to a trustee for B. for life, for her separate use, without restraint, on anticipation, & after her decease for the children of the marriage; & in default of children, for such persons as B. should by deed, attested by two witnesses, appoint, & in default of appointment, for her next of kin. B. & C. afterwards, in 1832 & 1836, received a part of the debt. C. having opened a banking account with E., F., G. & H. became indebted to them for advances, & they, being anxious to have B.'s guarantee, prepared a letter to which C. obtained B.'s signature. The letter was dated in Apr. 1843, & stated that in consideration of the bankers having advanced money to her husband, B. guaranteed the repayment thereof upon demand to the extent of £900 & deposited the bond as a collateral security, which bond she undertook to assign to them, at her expense, when called upon to do so. The bond was accordingly deposited with the bankers. In Nov. 1842, K. had been appointed trustee of the settlement. In 1844, B. took out administration to A. who was then dead. In 1846 the banking partnership was changed, E. & F., remaining in the firm, & having two new partners, L. & M. C. became bkpt. E., F., L. & M. instituted a suit for the purpose of enforcing their claim against the bond debt, claiming a right to have a legal appointment by B. in their favour, there being no children of the marriage, & charging K. with wilful default in not recovering the moneys already paid on the bond to C.:—Held: the life interest of B. was charged by the letter of Apr. 1843, with the balance due in 1846, when the banking firm was changed; but the bill, so far as it sought to charge K. with wilful default, was dismissed with costs.

The ct. will aid the defective execution of a power in favour of a creditor, or a purchaser, & it will do so, although the donee of the power be a married woman. But the ct. in such cases must be satisfied that the formalities which have not been observed, are no more than matters of form, & that the donee of the power has not by their non-observance been deprived of any of the protection which a due exercise of the power would have afforded her; & the ct. looks with especial jealousy on a transaction in which the wife may have acted under the influence of her husband (PARKER, V.-C.).—THACKWELL v. D. was also absolutely entitled in fee to certain other lands. A railway co. required part both of the settled estate & of the lands to which D. was absolutely entitled. By an agreement not under seal, made between D. & two of the directors of the co., after reciting that D. was owner of certain lands, part of which, being those specified in the schedule thereto, were required by the co., & that the purchase-money & compensation to be paid to D. in respect of the taking of such lands had not been ascertained, & that it had been agreed to refer those matters to arbitrators & an umpire therein named, the parties thereto bound themselves to abide by the determination of the arbitrators & umpire. The schedule comprised the lands required by the co., without any distinction as to the titles under which they were respectively held; & a single sum was awarded to D. as the purchase-money for the whole thereof. Before any conveyance was executed, D. died:—Held: the agreement operated in equity as an execution of the power of appointment in the settlement; & the purchase-money was payable to the legal personal representative of D. as part of his personal estate.

The question which arises on this petition is, whether in the events I am about to mention, a ct. of equity will treat a contract entered into by testator as an execution of a general power of appointment by deed. . . . The son was the survivor, & he mortgaged the estates to plfts. to secure a sum of £600 advanced at various times to the grandfather, father, & son, during the lifetime of the two former, on the faith of an agreement that those sums should be secured to them by a mtge.:—Held: this mtge. was a valid execution of the power, & compound interest allowed as provided for by the prior charges.—GEPP v. The donee of a power to appoint by deed among the children of her first marriage, who were entitled to the estate in equal shares in default of appointment, executed deeds which she erroneously supposed to have extinguished that power & conferred upon her an unlimited testamentary power. By her will made during her second coverture, expressly in pursuance of the testamentary power, & of every other power enabling her in that behalf, she appointed the estate to her eldest son, charged with a sum for the benefit, in equal shares, of all her other children of both marriages:—Held: the will operated as an exercise of the power to appoint by deed among the children of the first marriage.—BRUCE v. 964. Exercise must be strictly in accordance with power.—PORTLAND (DUKE) v. TOPHAM (LADY), No. 963, ante.

965. —[Whatever might be the intention of the donor, a power can be exercised only in accordance with, & within the limits expressed by, the deed. Where a power did not authorise a suspension of the enjoyment of the income of a fund, an appointment by which a part of such income was to be accumulated was held void.

In considering the validity of an appointment, the ct. cannot inquire into the motive of the donee, but it can & will inquire into his intention or purpose. If an appointment, however capricious, were made under an absolute power, it would be upheld, while if an ulterior object existed, conducing to the appointment, it would be set aside.

By virtue of an indenture, dated June 24, 1843, a sum of £52,000 stock was vested in trustees for Lady H. & Lady M., as the settlor, or the then Duke of P. should appoint; & in default of appointment the trustees were to pay the income of the fund to the two ladies equally during their joint lives, & to the survivor during her life; & on the death of the survivor the capital to be for the benefit of the then duke. Under another deed dated the 24th Nov. 1848, an annuity of £2,720 charged by the late duke upon his real estate, was to be paid by Lady H. & Lady M., as the duke during his life & after his decease Lord H., & after the decease of both the first representative of the survivor should appoint, in default of appointment to the two ladies equally during their joint lives; in case only one should survive the late duke, or in case both survived him, to pay to the survivor of the two ladies, or to each of them, an annuity of £1,360 during her life. The object of these provisions was to prevent a marriage between Lady M., pltf., & her present husband; but the late duke dying in Mar. 1854, that marriage took place in Oct. of the same year. In contemplation of this marriage two appointments were made, Sept. 21, 1854, by the donees of the power in the above-mentioned instruments, by which the then next payments of the dividends & annuity was appointed to Lady II., & subject thereto such dividends & annuity were to be paid to a certain account at a banker's, whence they were transferred to Lady II.'s account, & in pursuance of an order from her one moiety was to be invested & the other to be at her disposal. On Dec. 19, the duke appointed all the dividends on the £52,000 to Lady II., reserving to himself a power of revocation; & on the same day the whole of the annuity was by another deed appointed to Lady II. with like power of revocation.

In July, 1860, present pltf. instituted a suit to set those appointments aside, on the ground that they were frauds upon the power, having resulted from a bargain between the duke & Lady H. that she should accumulate one moiety, & hold the fund to be dealt with as the duke, for the time being, might direct. The Master of the Rolls upheld them, but the Lords Justices set them aside. This last decree was affirmed by the House of Lords. Very soon after this last decision the duke executed two further irrevocable appointments of the income & annuity in favour of Lady H. during the joint lives of herself & Lady M. The present suit was then instituted to set these appointments aside, the bill charging that this was only a fresh attempt to effect the object of the former appointments:—Held: although Lady H. was not aware of the new appointments until after they were made, & no understanding had been previously come to between her & the duke, the ct. will require clearest evidence that the appointee is entirely freed from all actual & moral obligation to apply the fund according to the earlier appointment, & in the absence of such evidence will set aside the later instrument.

Where an appointment has been set aside by reason of what has taken place between the donee of a power & an appointee, a second appointment by the same donee to the same appointee cannot be sustained otherwise than by clear proof on the

970. — Liability of estate of donee—To make good loss—Measure of liability.]—A sum of stock was settled in 1834 upon trust to keep up a policy of assurance on the life of D., & subject thereto upon trust for D. for life, & after his decease the fund & the moneys payable under the policy were to be held in trust for his three children, or such one or more of them, & in such shares & proportions, as D. should by deed or will appoint. In 1849 & 1850, D. & the three children released the trustees from the stock & from all liability to keep up the policy, D. entering into a covenant to keep it up, & the stock was transferred by the trustees. In 1852 D. appointed the policy to B., one of his daughters, to her separate use, without restraint on anticipation, upon a bargain with her that she should surrender the policy & pay the money to him. He promised her to effect & keep on foot a fresh policy, & to settle it upon the same trusts as the old one. The trustees, having no notice of the bargain, transferred the policy to B., who surrendered it to the office & paid the proceeds to D. D. effected the new policy, but failed to devote it effectually to the trusts. The money received on the surrender of the policy was £897, but the sum which would have been payable under it if it had been kept on foot till D.'s death was more than £5,000. The judge held that the appointment was invalid, & that D.'s estate after his death was liable not merely for the £897 which he had received, but for the sum which would have been received under the policy if it had been kept on foot, for that D. had virtually received the policy; & that the £5,000 must be raised out of his estate & be distributed as in default of appointment:—Held: apart from the question of B.'s concurrence, this was the correct measure of liability, for a person making a fraudulent appointment ought to be held liable to make good the whole loss occasioned by it to the trust estate, & moreover, D. was liable under his covenant to make good all loss arising from his not having kept the policy on foot but B. having been an active party to the transaction could not complain of it, & the amount payable by D.'s estate must be diminished by the share which she, if not a party to the transaction, would have taken in default of appointment, & D.'s promise to settle a fresh policy, which promise he failed to keep, was not a misrepresentation entitling her to say that she had been deceived into concurring in the transaction & was to be treated as if she had not concurred.—Re DEANE, BRIDGER v. DEANE (1889), 42 Ch. D. 9; 61 L. T. 492; 37 W. R. 786, C. A.

971. Doctrine of fraudulent exercise—Not applicable to release of power not coupled with duty.]—

(1) The fact that a release of a limited power of appointment will result in a benefit to the donee of the power is not sufficient to make the release fraudulent & void. The doctrines applicable to the fraudulent exercise of a power of appointment do not apply to the release of a power not coupled with a duty.

(2) A father, tenant for life under his marriage settlement, had, in the events which had happened, an exclusive power to appoint for the benefit of a daughter or her issue, & in default of appointment the fund went to the daughter absolutely; the father, being in want of money, released this power, & subsequently he & his daughter mortgaged their interests in the fund for £10,000, the whole of which was paid to the father, & applied by him for his own purposes:—Held: the release was valid.—Re SOMES, *SMITH v. Before A. was married or had exercised the power, some of the parties entitled in remainder filed a bill to have the accounts of testator's estate taken, & the residue ascertained & secured. Before decree, A. married & had a child; & four days after the child was born, he exercised the power; & then filed a bill against pltf. in the former suit, stating his marriage, the birth of his child, & the appointment, & insisting that, thereby, the interests of pltf. in the former suit had been wholly determined & put an end to. Pltf., however, contended that the appointment was fraudulent & void in toto, inasmuch as, though it was made in favour of A.'s children, he would, in the probable event of their dying, become entitled to the property as their next of kin:—Held: under existing circumstances, the appointment was good, & therefore, no decree ought to be made in the original suit until the happening of the events which would entitle A. to the property.—BUTCHER v. JACKSON (1845), 14 Sim. 444; 60 E. R. 430.

993. —.]—Appointment by a father to his infant child under a will is not fraudulent, provided he does not exceed his power, notwithstanding he makes the appointment in such a way as may ultimately put him into the absolute possession of the whole fund, for his own benefit, & thus defeat the contingent interests of others interested therein. Testator, being possessed of considerable property, by his will gave certain legacies to his three nieces, & their children, as therein mentioned. He then devised all the residue of his freehold, copyhold, & leasehold estates, except a certain leasehold house at B., & personal property to trustees, upon trust for his nephew E. for life, & on his decease, subject to a power of jointuring his wife, upon trust for the children & grandchildren of E. as he should appoint, & in default of appointment, to his children generally, they taking vested interests at twenty-one; & in default of their taking such vested interests, upon trust for his nieces, & their several families, to take in the same manner as before declared respecting the several legacies. After testator's death, E. married, & had one child, a son, born June 2, 1839, & four days after this event, viz. June 6, he, by a deed poll, reciting the will, appointed to his children generally, with a power of revocation, as he should by deed or will appoint; & in default of such appointment, subject as therein mentioned, in trust for his said son then born, & all his after-born children, as joint tenants, for their absolute use & benefit. This appointment was objected to by the children of one of testator's nieces, who were thus excluded from the contingent interest in their favour pointed out by testator, on the ground that it operated as a fraud against those interests, & contrary to testator's intention:—Held: as testator had intrusted E. with such a power of appointment, the ct. could not restrain the exercise of that power, however it might frustrate his ultimate intention.

Looking at testator's will & the deed poll, . . . I think that E. has exercised his power of appointment in a very reasonable manner, & perfectly within the limits given him by the will. If it was competent for testator to entrust such an authority to the appointor, it is not within the jurisdiction of the ct. to restrain such an exercise of authority. . . . Equality [is] the highest equity known to the ct.; & as the father has appointed among his children in equal shares, this ct. cannot determine the appointment to be improper, upon the bare suggestion that a contingency might arise, in which the appointment would ultimately turn out for the benefit of the appointor. At any rate the ct. cannot declare the appointment to have been improperly made before that contingency happens (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—PEMBERTON v. JACKSON (1845), 5 L. T. O. S. 17.

A., having a child eight months old, & another en ventre sa mère, appointed the fund to all his children to vest immediately. One of the children survived A. & died an infant, & his share was claimed by his mother as his administrator:—Held: the appointment was not a fraud on the power, & she was entitled.—*FEARON v. He also gave a bond for payment of an equal sum to the trustees. By the settlement, which followed the trusts of the arts., the funds were limited for the benefit of the husband & wife during their respective lives, & then for the benefit of their children, but the ultimate trust, in default of issue, was for A., his exors., administrators & assigns. There were no children of the marriage, & C. having survived her husband, who died in 1832 afterwards, in 1841, married pltf. In 1834 A. appointed another share to another of his daughters, E., who was an infant, on her marriage, & gave a bond for payment of an equal sum to her trustees. The trusts of the settlement were similar to those of C.'s settlement, the trust in default of issue being for A., his exors., administrators & assigns. In 1835 A. became bkpt., & proofs were made by the trustees on the bonds, in respect of which considerable dividends were received. In 1866 A. died, & in 1867 C.'s & E.'s shares were paid to their respective trustees, & the other shares to the other children, & a release was taken from the parties interested. C.'s share was afterwards paid into ct. under the Trustee Relief Act.

C.'s husband filed a bill praying that the appointments to C. & E. might be declared frauds upon the power, & that the fund might be divided as in default of appointment:—Held: with regard to the appointment to E., who was an infant at the time of her marriage, the bargain under which A. reserved to himself an ultimate interest in the appointed fund, was a bargain between A. & the intended husband, & was not corrupt or improper, so as to render the appointment invalid.—*COOPER v. The tenant for life of real estate under a marriage settlement had a power of appointing the estate among the children of the marriage, of whom there were four. In default of appointment the property was to be divided equally among the children. There were four children of the marriage, of whom one died in 1869, a bachelor & intestate. Pltf. was his personal representative. In 1876 pltf., appointed by deed in favour of his three surviving children, but reserved a power of revocation. In 1880 he revoked by deed the appointment made in 1876, so that the property might stand limited as theretofore. Pltf. proposed to execute an absolute release of the power of appointment, & submitted that he would thereby become entitled to a share of the trust fund. Defts. contended that pltf. executed the deed of revocation in 1880 in order that he might claim the share for his own benefit, & that his intention was to commit a fraud on the power:—Held: the donee of a power might deal with it in any lawful way he pleased. He might exercise the power & reserve to himself a power of revocation. Although in this case by an accident, namely, the death of one of the objects of the power, the donee had derived benefit from the doing, he could not be regarded as having committed a fraud on the power, & upon executing a proper release he would be entitled to the share he claimed.—*SHIRLEY v. A. was married but had no children. He was a member of the class, B. was not. Testator's wife desiring that B. should not be excluded from succeeding to the estates, induced testator to make a sixth codicil by which he revoked the power of appointment given to A. by the fifth codicil. On hearing of this A. had an interview with testator's wife at which he gave her his written promise to leave the estates to B. on acquiring the power to do so if she would get testator to revoke the sixth codicil. Testator's wife communicated this promise to the testator, who thereupon destroyed the sixth codicil. After testator's death A. by deed appointed the estates to himself in fee on failure of his issue male. The nephew had five children, one of whom, a son, after attaining twenty-one, died unmarried & intestate. Afterwards a daughter, who had also attained twenty-one, married, & on this occasion the father covenanted that he would, in exercise of the power, appoint by will to the trustees of her settlement one-fifth of the £5,000. The daughter also assigned to the trustees all that her fifth part or share in default of any testamentary appointment of & in the said sum of £5,000. 1020. —.]—A person being by his marriage settlement tenant for life of an estate in Ireland, held on lease for lives renewable for ever, with power of appointment to one or more of the children of the marriage,—the estate in default of appointment to go to the first and other sons successively in tail male,—by deed poll, dated Jan. 14, 1804, appointed to his eldest son an estate in tail male; & by indenture of lease, executed four days after, the father & son, in consideration of £1,600, to be applied in paying debts on the estate, & renewal fines then due, demised part of it for lives. By a deed dated Dec. 1807, the son, in consideration of debts paid for him by the father, & in discharge of the trust & confidence reposed in him, conveyed the estate & all his interest therein to the father & his heirs. The father, by his will made after the death of the eldest son without issue, devised the estate—charged thereby with certain legacies—to the use of his two surviving sons & their respective issue, in equal portions, as tenants in common:—Held: the execution of the lease for £1,600 by the father & son so soon after the deed of appointment, & the circumstances appearing on those deeds & on the deed of reconveyance of 1807, raised such suspicions of the validity of the appointment, as required the ct., before it could adjudicate on the father's title to dispose of the estate, to direct an inquiry whether that appointment was a bond fide execution of the power.—*JACKSON v. Although he had no power of leasing, he had executed a lease which had become vested in G., to whom P. then agreed to execute a new lease. A joint bond to indemnify G. against the consequences of the determination of the lease by P.'s death was executed by P. & by his daughter, & on the same day a will, prepared by the solr. who had prepared the bond, was executed by P., whereby he appointed the estate to his daughter exclusively, & at the same time G. surrendered the old lease, & a new one was executed to him for the remainder of the former term. P. afterwards died, & one of his sons filed a bill to have the appointment declared void, as

1024. —.]—A wife obtained against her husband, who was the donee of a special power to appoint a fund of £50,000 amongst his children or remoter issue, a decree nisi for the dissolution of their marriage. Negotiations ensued for the compromise of the wife's claim to permanent alimony, & ultimately terms of settlement were signed by which (inter alia) the husband agreed to appoint more than half the £50,000 fund to the only child of the marriage. It was in evidence that the husband was at the time desperately anxious to have the decree nisi made absolute at the earliest possible moment so that he might be free to remarry, that the wife's legal adviser was aware of this, & that it formed an important element in the negotiations, during which the husband was pressed to make a far larger appointment than he had originally proposed. The terms of settlement were confirmed by the Divorce Ct. & the decree nisi made absolute. Afterwards the husband only executed the appointment on advice that the Divorce Ct. would, if necessary, order him to do so, & that, if he then still refused to make the appointment, he might be committed for contempt of ct.:—Held: in the absence of evidence that the wife had accepted a smaller annuity by way of alimony in consideration of the increased appointment to her child, the appointment was not rendered invalid by reason of its execution in pursuance of an agreement entered into as part of the negotiations as to alimony, but the appointment was a fraud on the power as having been made by the donee in pursuance of an agreement entered into by him to obtain a personal benefit for himself—namely, freedom to remarry.—*COCHRANE v. In 1882, A. & B., the younger of whom was the age of sixty-two, & neither of whom had any child, having incurred their interests, & being pressed by their mtgees., applied to the trustees to exercise the power of giving them their shares of the estate in fee. 1051. ———.]—Appointment with forfeiture clause—

Forfeiture on specified marriage.—Testatrix, by will, dated in 1845, limited to a daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, & declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish & adopt the Christian, or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, & in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue & go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. J., a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. Pltf., one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both J. & pltf. were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held: (1) the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy; (2) it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, & therefore the share of J. was forfeited; (3) the forfeiture clause must be read in conjunction with the gift over, & therefore, so far as it affected, after the death of the appointor, the share of a child born after the death of the creator of the power, it was void for remoteness, whether such share was appointed for life only or absolutely, & consequently pltf. had not forfeited her share.—*HODGSON v. There were three children of the marriage, T., J., & H., & in 1890 W. by deed appointed that after her death one-third of the property should be held in trust for T., another third in trust for J., & as to the remaining third upon trust to pay the income to H., if not then a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, or until she should become a member of either, & subject as aforesaid, as to the capital & income, to T. & J. W. died in 1893, & in 1895 H. became a member of a sisterhood:—Held: the appointment of H.'s third was not a fraud on the power.—WAINWRIGHT v. MILLER, [1897] 2 Ch. 255; 66 L. J. Ch. 616; 76 L. ### SUB-SECT. 3.—PROOF OF FRAUD.

1053. Necessity for proof.—I am willing to admit the general principle, that if a father having a power of appointment among his children, thinks proper to exercise it in a way, which on the face of it appears to be for the benefit of the children, but is in reality more or less exclusively for his own, the transaction cannot stand; but, until the ct. has information before it of the value of the copyhold, & the amount of the ultimate surplus, it is not in a situation to say the transaction is unfair or even suspicious. Whatever the transaction may have been, if there is no evidence to impeach it, how is it possible for the ct. to interfere? On the face of the deed everything is stated with the most minute particularity, & as there is nothing to show it is not a fair family arrangement, there is no reason why the ct. should not make the usual decree for a sale (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—UTTERMERE v. WILLIAMS (1838), 2 Jur. 838.

1054. —.]—By a post-nuptial marriage settlement property in the funds belonging to the wife was settled in trust for the husband & wife for their lives & the life of the survivor, & then for such one or more exclusively of the others or other of the children of the marriage, in such parts & shares, etc., as the wife should by deed or will appoint. There were four children of the marriage. The husband died, & the wife appointed the whole fund, & assigned her life interest therein to the eldest child, a daughter, who had attained the age of twenty-one, but who, together with the other children, was living with her mother:—Held: the appointment & assignment were valid, & a trustee refusing to join in the transfer of the fund, pursuant to the appointment, was not allowed his costs of a suit brought against him by the daughter to compel the transfer, though, under all the circumstances of the case, he was not decreed to pay the costs of the suit.

If it can ever be shown that this deed was executed from improper motives, those who are interested in doing so can apply to set it aside. There is nothing whatever to justify this ct. in not giving effect to it at present (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—CAMPBELL v. HOME (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 664; 7 Jur. 365; 62 E. R. 1062.

1056. —.]—Under a settlement, made in 1828, testator had power to appoint by will to & among his children a sum of £35,000. By his will, made in 1865, he bequeathed £150,000 to his daughter Jessie, & directed that this legacy should be paid to four trustees named in the will, & should be held by them upon trust for her during her life, with remainder for her issue. The will then recited the power of appointment contained in the settlement, & by virtue of that power the testator appointed £10,000, part of the £35,000, to the same daughter; but his will was that the same should be paid to the trustees thereinbefore named with reference to the legacy of £150,000, & should be held by them upon the trusts therein-before declared thereof. Testator then appointed two sums of £10,000 & £7,000 respectively in favour of two other daughters, & he appointed the residue of the £35,000 to his son Robert absolutely. In case he had exceeded his power in not appointing the £10,000 to his daughter Jessie unconditionally, but in directing the settlement thereof, & in case his said daughter or her husband, or others having any right or power to object to the settlement thereof as aforesaid, should so object, or should not confirm such settlement, if required so to do, then he appointed that the said sum of £10,000 should go & belong to his son Robert, "but who will I am assured settle the same voluntarily in the manner in which I have attempted to settle the same as aforesaid so as thereby to carry out my wishes." After testator's death the son Robert executed a declaration of trust of the £10,000 to carry out his father's wishes. There was no evidence, other than the will itself, of any bargain between the son & testator that the former would settle the £10,000:—Held: the appointment of the £10,000 in favour of the daughter Jessie was invalid; the £10,000 did not pass to the son under the appointment of the residue to him; but under the last appointment to him, there being only an expression of testator's wish, & no evidence of any bargain by the son that the fund should be settled, it passed to him absolutely, free from any obligation to settle it, & was, therefore, validly appointed.—*Re CRAWSHAY, CRAWSHAY v. (1) Though a party is not permitted to execute a power for his own benefit, & the objection cannot be waived by a party, participating in the benefit, as against other interests, the ct. will not act against the title upon a mere suspicion, that a transaction was of that nature; appearing fair both upon the instruments & the abstract: viz. a purchase under the execution of a power of appointment by a father, subject to estates for life in him & his wife, in favour of their son; all three joining; & receiving the money, the fair value; which is presumed to be received according to their interests in the estate; & the purchaser not bound to see to the application.

By lease & release of Dec. 10 & 11, 1807, in consideration of the debts paid by the father for the son, the son reconveys to the father the estate which had been appointed to the son:—Held: from the circumstances of the two first deeds being executed nearly at the same time, of the father's debts being provided for out of the estate, & of the son's restoring the estate to the father, there was so much doubt as to the validity of the appointment, notwithstanding a recital in one of the deeds, that the father had paid the debts of the son, as to make it necessary to inquire into the validity of the appointment.

The appointment was sought to be set aside after the deaths of both appointor & appointee, on the ground of a corrupt bargain between them, & amongst other evidence a letter written by H. was produced, wherein she acknowledged that there had been an agreement between herself & S., that her money should, in part, be applied for her benefit; & complained of the violation of that agreement. The husband of S. positively denied the existence of such motives; & the judge thought that, although the case was involved in suspicion, yet that the onus of proof was on pltf. seeking to set the transaction aside; he therefore dismissed the bill, but without costs:—Held: as the circumstances showed that the appointor had intended to devise a benefit to herself, although it was not proved that she had actually derived a benefit, excepting indirectly by the discharge of debts of S., for which she, H. W., was surety, the appointment must be set aside.

(2) The letter referred to was taken as evidence that at one time the appointor, in making the appointment, had intended to derive a benefit from it; & TURNER, L.J., expressed his opinion that the onus was upon the parties supporting the appointment to show that, at the time of the execution of the appointment, that intention had been abandoned by her.—*HUMPHREY v. The father remained in possession for seven years, & then died, without having taken any step to carry the agreement into effect. (2) Where there is an appointment to A. & B. by one instrument, & a fortiori by different instruments, the appointment to A. may be good, & the appointment to B. bad, & A. & B. may well agree between themselves that the bad appointment shall not be disturbed.

(3) Certain policies of insurance, effected by a father on his life as a provision for his daughters, were assigned to a trustee, upon trust for such of the daughters as the father should appoint; & certain estates were demised to the same trustee, upon trust, out of the rents & profits to secure the payment of the premiums. The trustee advanced some sums of money in payment of the premiums, & the father appointed the bonuses which had accrued upon the policies to three of his daughters; & the three daughters soon afterwards authorised the trustee to receive the sum paid by the office for the bonuses, & invest part thereof as a fund to keep down the premiums, & a part of the sum was applied in satisfaction of the arrears of such premiums. A subsequent appointment was made, in favour of the other daughters, of the residue of the sums to be received on the policies, & which was intended to equalise the shares:—Held: the first appointment was a fraud upon the power, its immediate object being to relieve the father, & its necessary consequence to relax the diligence of the trustee in enforcing the rights of the daughters against the father; & the application of the trust funds, in pursuance of the appointment by the trustee, who knew that the appointment was fraudulent, was a breach of trust, for which he was responsible to the objects of the power.—*HARRISON v. B. had a power to appoint a rentcharge in favour of her sons, & a power to appoint policy moneys in favour of her children. On Aug. 13, 1838, she appointed the rent charge to her son G., who, on the following day, settled it, not only in favour of himself & other objects of the power, but also of B.'s husband & others not objects of the power. On the same day, B. appointed the policy moneys partly in favour of objects of the power & partly in favour of her husband & other persons not such objects. The deed contained a proviso, that if any of the objects should refuse to accede to the arrangements as to the rent charge & policy moneys, he should forfeit the benefits intended. On the same day, G. gave a bond to A.'s husband for securing him a benefit out of the policy moneys. The ct. being of opinion that the transaction must be taken as a whole, held it altogether void, both as against the objects of the power & the rest, considering it an entangled transaction to effect a fraudulent execution of the power in favour of persons who were not objects.—*AGASSIZ v. The husband being desirous of raising money by mtge. of his settled estates & being unable to do so on account of the existing charges thereon, applied to the wife to postpone her pin money & jointure annuities to his proposed mtges. The wife consented, provided that the husband would exercise a power of appointment which he had over a sum of £30,000 in favour of his younger children, to the extent of appointing £5,000 to the child under her care. He accordingly did so by a revocable deed; & by a similar deed, dated the next day, reciting the former appointment, he appointed the rest of the fund to his only other younger child. The former deed only was communicated to the wife, & she objecting to the power of revocation, it was cancelled, & a new irrevocable deed was prepared & executed of the same date as the former. The husband died before the mtge. which he proposed to make was effected:—Held: although the bribe to the husband would affect the validity of the appointment of the £5,000, yet the appointment of the £25,000 was not so connected with the former appointment as to be also invalid; nor indeed was the motive for the latter appointment the same as in the former case, for instead of being an inducement to the wife to consent to the proposed arrangement, the second appointment, if revealed to her, would probably have prevented her concurring in postponing her pin money & jointure.—*ROWLEY v. One of the daughters, by her will, after expressing her intention to appoint her share to her children, gave a part only to her children, & after directing her debts & legacies to be paid, gave to one of her children the residue of the personal estate which belonged to her, or which she had power to dispose of.—Held: the unappointed part of the share was not appointed by the residuary bequest, & was divisible amongst the children equally.

Although the testatrix has expressed the strongest intention to distribute all, yet she has not distributed all & though she may be taken to have been very desirous that the power should be exercised yet if she has not done so then all the ct. can say is, that this portion ought to have been

SECT. 1.—BY EXPRESS RELEASE OR DISCLAIMER.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), ss. 155, 156.

1092. Right to release—General rule.]—I think that every power reserved by the grantor, whether he has retained an interest in the estate as tenant for life or otherwise, is an interest in him, which may be released or extinguished. . . . I think that every power reserved to a grantee for life, though not appendant to his own estate, as a leasing power, but to take effect after the determination of his own estate, & therefore, in gross, may be extinguished (LEACH, V.-C.).—WEST v. 1093. ———.]—In West v. Berney, No. 1092, ante, it appears to me, as the result of the authorities, that every power reserved to a grantee or devisee for life, though not appendant to his own estate, as a leasing power, but to take effect after the determination of his own estate, & therefore in gross, may be extinguished. Such a grantee or devisee can deal with the estate in respect of his freehold interest; & his dealing with the estate, so as to create interests inconsistent with the exercise of his power, must extinguish his power, upon the general principle that a person is not permitted to defeat his own grant. It makes no difference that here the power was a particular power in favour of children; such a power could not be called a trust, for the alleged cestui que trust could not compel the execution of it, & being at the option of the grantee for life to exercise or not, any dealing with the estate inconsistent with its exercise must determine his option.—SMITH v. DEATH (1820), 5 Madd. 371; 56 E. R. 937.

After this A. by his deed, in the lifetime of J. remised, released, & quit-claimed his said power to the feoffee & the remainderman:—Held: this future power was annulled by the defeasance.

Collateral powers & common law authorities, cannot be barred or extinguished by fine, feoffment, or any other conveyance; but powers relating to the land may be extinguished by a fine or feoffment.

A present power may be extinguished by release to any one who has an estate of freehold in the land, in possession, reversion, or remainder, & the estate defeasible by the power is thereby made absolute.—ALBANY'S CASE (1586), 1 Co. Rep. 110 b; 76 E. R. 246.

On the death of her husband, the restraint on anticipation ceases, & therefore she is entitled, with the concurrence of A., to a transfer of the fund.

Another point . . . is with respect to the power the settlement gives to the mother of disposing of trust funds by will. The question is, whether she can now deprive herself of it & abdicate it. Now the case of Smith v. Death, No. 1093, ante, & others of that kind have decided that a power of this description may be parted with; & there is, therefore, I apprehend, nothing to prevent her from now releasing it & thereby precluding herself from the exercise of it (PLUMER, M.R.).—BARTON v. it until the time appointed; nor can they enter into any anterior compact respecting it. The fact that the individual to be affected by the execution of the power, a youth of twenty-two, married three years before the time appointed for such execution; the fact that the trustees formally approved of the marriage, & were made aware of the settlement thereon, including a provision out of the trust estate for the intended wife; & the fact, moreover, that they gave no caution, or warning, that they might ultimately be obliged to defeat it; all these facts made no difference in the result; for it was held to be the duty of the trustees, the husband having, in their judgment subsequently misconducted himself, to execute the power so as to restrict him to a life interest, although the effect was to defeat the provision for the wife, as well as other claims founded on a confident expectation that the marriage settlement would not be disturbed.—*WELLER v. 1103. ———.]—Testator, by his will, dated in 1880, after giving specific legacies to one of the two defts., A. & B., & to the wife of the other of them, devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to his trustees, defts. A. & B., upon trust for sale & conversion, & directed that his trustees should hold one moiety "in trust for such persons, in such shares, & generally in such manner" as A. & B. should in their absolute discretion direct, limit, & appoint; & in default of appointment, in trust for all testator's children, living at testator's death equally. Testator stated that his reason for giving such general power of appointment to the trustees was, that he had the fullest confidence in them that they would do what was right & proper, & that they would dispose of the property subject to power justly & fairly & as they thought it ought to be disposed of & divided by testator. By a deed poll dated July 20, 1882, B. absolutely & for ever released the moiety subject to the power, to the intent that, after the execution of that deed, such moiety might go & be held upon the trusts by the will declared concerning the same in default of appointment.

Pltf., a son of testator, brought an action for the administration of testator's property & contended that, by reason of the release by B., the power of appointment, even if simply collateral, was entirely destroyed under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 52, & pltf. was, therefore, entitled to a share of the moiety.—Held: the power which the trustees had was a power coupled with a duty, which neither of them was at liberty to destroy; such power still remained, notwithstanding the deed poll executed by B.; & the fund could not be distributed during the joint lives of the trustees, unless they joined in making an irrevocable appointment.—*Re EYRE, EYRE v. 1108. ———.]—The power which the Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 39, gives to the ct. of dispensing with a restraint on anticipation is a discretionary power, to be exercised with great caution, & only where a strong case is made for it, & is not necessarily to be exercised because it will be for the benefit of the married woman.

A fund was settled on a married woman for life for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation, remainder to her children & issue as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to the children equally, with cross limitations in the event of any dying under twenty-one without issue. She being in straitened circumstances arranged with her eldest son that his fifth share in a part of the trust funds should be applied in a specified way for her benefit. With a view to this she released her power of appointment over the trust funds, & then applied to the ct. to have the fifth share of the son in the agreed part of the funds together with her life interest therein sold, & the proceeds applied as above.—Held: the ct. would not in the exercise of its discretion dispense with the restraint on anticipation in order to give effect to a release executed by the donee of the power for her own benefit.—Re *LITTLE, HARRISON v. 1109. — Release of power under marriage settlement.—By a marriage settlement certain real property was settled upon the husband & wife for life, & afterwards to such of the children of the marriage as they should jointly appoint; in default of joint appointment, as the survivor should appoint; & in default of such appointment to the children equally, as tenants in common. The wife died without having joined in any appointment. The husband subsequently executed a deed poll, by which he absolutely released his power of appointment given by the settlement, & afterwards by his will, professed to execute the power of selection, without taking notice of the deed of release, & divided the property in unequal shares among his children:—Held: the deed poll releasing the power was valid, the children took as tenants in common, & the will was inoperative as an execution of the power.—SMITH v. PLUMMER (1848), 17 L. J. Ch. 145; 10 L. T. O. S. 389.

1110. — —.—By a marriage settlement certain property was conveyed to trustees during the joint lives of the husband & wife, in trust to pay the rents & profits to the wife for life, for her separate use, & after her death to the husband for life, & after his decease to the use of such persons as the husband should by will appoint, & in default of such appointment to certain uses for the benefit of the children of the marriage, & in default of any such appointment & issue, there was a limitation to the next of kin of the husband. By a subsequent deed of 1828, which recited that there were no children of the marriage, the husband & wife released & appointed the property to trustees for sale, & covenanted to levy a fine for the purpose of extinguishing all powers & interest of the wife. It was also declared that the release & fine should operate to extinguish the husband's power of appointment by will so far only as any such will made in execution of the power should not operate & enure to the use of the trustees, or in confirmation of the indenture of 1828. A fine was accordingly levied, & subsequently, contrary to the expectation of the parties, a child of the marriage was born. The husband then made a will & executed his power of appointment in favour of the trustees of the deed of 1828, & confirmed that deed in all respects. The trustees contracted to sell the estate; but as the only child of the marriage refused to join in the sale, a bill for specific performance was filed:—Held: the power of appointment under the marriage settlement was extinguished by the deed of 1828, except for the special purpose of confirming that deed by will.—WALMSLEY v. JOWETT (1854), 23 L. J. Ch. 425; 22 L. T. O. S. 279; 2 W. R. 179.

1111. — —.—A father, who was tenant for life under his marriage settlement, had power to appoint among his children, & in default of appointment the fund was to go to all the children equally, the shares to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. There were issue of the marriage three sons; one died an infant; the other two attained twenty-one; but one of them died a bachelor & intestate. The father took out administration to the last-mentioned son, & executed a deed releasing his power of appointment, & then took out a summons calling on the trustee of the settlement to transfer one moiety to him:—Held: the release of the power was valid & the father was entitled to the son's reversionary interest as his administrator.—*Re RADCLIFFE, RADCLIFFE v. 1116. Covenant that estate free from incumbrances.—By marriage settlement J. had a power of appointing portions for daughters to the amount of £16,000 under a term of years created for raising the same: he appointed £13,000 part thereof among four of his daughters, on their respective marriages, & took assignments from them of their interests in the term. On the marriage of the eldest son, J. & the eldest son covenant that the settled estate is free from all incumbrances. After this J. makes his will, & appoints the remaining £3,000 to his only unmarried daughter. Notwithstanding the clear intention of J. to keep the term alive for his benefit, yet his covenant in the son's marriage settlement will bar his claim of any benefit from it as against the parties interested under that settlement.—*GOWER v. 1120. Conditional power—Satisfaction of condition.]—F. having an estate, which came to her ex p. materna, on her marriage conveyed the same to trustees to such uses as she should direct, with remainder to her own right heirs; by will, she directed the estate to be sold, the money to be laid out in the funds, & the trustees to permit the husband to receive the interest for life; then, after the deduction of £3,500 to uses which vested in pltf. H. By codicil she gave pltf., her husband, a power of appointing the £3,500 in case A. should marry without his consent. G. died, living testatrix, before the codicil made, but F. in the codicil took no notice thereof.—Held: the £3,500 was vested in A., & the trustees having paid out a larger sum by £17, with intent to appropriate it, it was well appropriated; & A. having married once, with her father's consent, his power is gone; & he consenting to give up his life-interest, it was directed to be paid to the trustees in her marriage settlement.—*HUTCHESON v. 1121. ———.]—Impossibility of satisfaction.]—Real estate was devised to H. & her assigns for life, in case she should continue unmarried, & after her decease unto such persons as she should appoint, & in default of appointment, then over to other persons; & testator declared that, in case H. should marry in the lifetime of his wife with her consent, or after the death of his wife, with the consent of two persons mentioned in his will, or the survivor of them, H. & her assigns should hold the same real estate in such manner as she should have done if she had continued unmarried. After the death as well of testator's wife, as also of the two persons so mentioned in his will, & above twenty years since, H. married R., who also died in the lifetime of H.—Held: the estate for life in H. was become absolute, & she could then execute the power of appointment.—*AISLIE v. The niece attained twenty-one; but before any settlement was made under the power she died, without having been married.—Held: the power could not then be exercised, & her heir was entitled to the whole of the real estate.

(2) A trustee of a will who had formally renounced that character by a deed which purported, but ineffectually, to appoint a successor, being applied to eleven years afterwards to join with his original co-trustee in a deed purporting to be an exercise of a discretionary power which could only be exercised by the two trustees of the will for the time being, refused to do so, without an indemnity, but ultimately, on being indemnified, executed the deed.—Held: he could not resume his position as trustee for such a purpose, & even if he could, his execution of the deed under the circumstances stated, could be regarded only as a mere formal act, & not as an exercise of that discretion which was essential to a due execution of such a power.—LANCASHIRE v. LANCASHIRE (1848), 2 Ph. 657; 17 L. J. Ch. 270; 12 L. T. O. S. 21; 12 Jur. 363; 41 E. R. 1097, L. C.

Disentailing deed.]—By a marriage settlement, lands were limited to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to trustees for a term of four hundred years, to commence from the decease of the survivor of the husband & wife, remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife begotten by the husband, remainder to the heirs of the husband. The trust of the term was, in case there should be issue of the marriage a son & one or more younger child or children, who should live to attain his, her, or their age or ages of twenty-one years, to raise such sum, not exceeding £2,000 in the whole, as the husband & wife should by any deed or writing appoint, or in default thereof, as the survivor should by deed or writing, or his or her last will or testament, appoint; & in default of such appointment, or subject thereto, after the moneys so appointed should have been raised, & the costs of the trustees paid, the term was to cease or be assigned in trust to attend the inheritance. There were younger children of the marriage who attained twenty-one. The wife died without having joined in any appointment, & afterwards the husband levied a fine of the premises.—Held: the power

1127. Exercise with intent to exhaust.]—By a post-nuptial settlement power was given to a husband by deed or deeds to appoint a fund, after the determination of his own interest therein, amongst his children, subject to a proviso empowering him by deed or will to appoint one-fourth of the income to “his wife” for her life. The husband in exercise of these powers by deed irrevocably appointed one-fourth of the income in favour of his then wife for her life, & “subject & without prejudice to the trust” in her favour “thereinbefore limited, if the same should take effect,” he appointed the fund amongst his two daughters, who were adults, & his one son, who was under age, in equal thirds, reserving, as to his son, a power of revocation which he subsequently exercised by irrevocably appointing one-third of the fund to such son absolutely. The then wife afterwards died; the husband married again; & on his second marriage purported by deed irrevocably to appoint one-fourth of the income of the fund to his second wife during her life:—Held: the appointment of income in favour of the second wife was ineffectual.

What was done in Jan. 1885, was inconsistent with any intention on the part of the appointor & with good faith, to appoint to anybody else other than those for whom he was then providing. . . . 1130. ———.]—Any dealing with an estate by the donee of a power inconsistent with the exercise of that power releases it.

A husband & wife had a joint power, & subject thereto the survivor had a separate power, to appoint property among certain objects. The husband & wife & the persons entitled in default of appointment executed a deed whereby the wife, with her husband's consent, & those persons according to their several & respective estates & interests as beneficial owners assigned the property to an object. The joint power was not referred to. The wife died, & the husband appointed the property to other objects:—Held: whether or not the deed of assignment operated as a joint appointment, & semble, it did so operate, it released the husband's separate power, & his subsequent appointment was inoperative.—FOAKES v. JACKSON, [1900] 1 Ch. 807; 69 L. J. Ch. 352; 83 L. T. 26; 48 W. R. 616.

1131. Representation by donee—Of intention not to exercise power.]—A father, during the treaty for the marriage of his daughter, represented that she would become entitled, on the decease of her parents, to one-third share of certain trust funds, subject to the exercise of a certain power of appointment vested in himself, but which power he did not intend to execute. The settlement recited that the intended wife was so entitled, “subject to any exercise” of the power. In truth, if the wife pre-deceased her parents, her share did not vest in her, but went to her issue. The father exercised the power to the prejudice of his daughter, & her issue. The wife pre-deceased her father, leaving issue. The father afterwards died:—Held: the father had precluded himself from executing the power; & this equity might be asserted by the issue of the marriage.—*WALFORD v. ## SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1135. What constitutes—Discretion to apportion gift.]—Residuary devise & bequest for such of testator's relations & kindred in such proportions, etc., as his exors. should think proper; recommending & advising his trustees & exors. to give the greatest share to such person & persons who in their opinion & judgment should appear to them to be his nearest relations & the most deserving; declaring his intention not to control their discretion; but that everything relative to that disposition, who were his relations & the proportions, should be entirely in the discretion of the trustees & exors. & the heirs, exors. & administrators, of the survivor of them. A trust & a power. The ground of the power being personal confidence, it is primâ facie limited to the original trustees; not without express words passing to others, to whom by legal transmission the same character may happen to belong; & cannot be executed by the devisees & exors., for that specific purpose only of the surviving trustee. H. shall in his discretion think fit & proper." Testator never made a codicil, & left children, grandchildren, & a great-grandchild:—Held: (1) the children & their issue living at the death of testator were entitled to the estate, subject to the power of selection given to H.; (2) the power so given to him was not confined to directing in what shares members of the class were to take, but that he could place any share in settlement.—*Re HUGHES, HUGHES v. Where the power is given with particular persons indicated who may be the objects of it, the et. has considered any words importing a direction or desire or recommendation or even a wish in their favour, as imposing a duty on the donee of the power as amounting to a trust in favour of the objects (STUART, V.-C.).—*BROOK v. 1145. ———— Power to appoint to children.]—
A married woman being entitled under a will to a residuary fund in ct., such fund was settled under the direction of the ct., giving her a general power of appointment by will amongst her children, with a limitation over to the children equally. One of the sons becoming indebted, the mother executed two deeds whereby she covenanted with him & his creditors to appoint to him not less than £1,000 & by her will made a short time after, in pursuance of the power, she appointed to her son £1,000:—Held: the appointment was valid.

A power to appoint to children by deed or will, is a power in the nature of a trust, it is a power created for the benefit of the objects of the power. . . . The donee of the power, in the exercise of the power, ought to have this object, the benefit of the children, solely in view. . . . Where the donor gives the power to appoint by will alone, he does that designedly, that the donee should exercise it irrevocably, that is, not until the end of his or her life. . . . Where the donee of such a power is clearly shown to be exercising the power with a view to the benefit of some person not an object of the power, & a fortiori, with a view of benefitting himself, even in the absence of a positive bargain, such an appointment ought not to stand, being a violation of the principle that no regard shall be had to anything but the objects of the power, & without saying that should be the motive, the intention should be only for the benefit of the objects of the power, not to confer a benefit on the donee himself. . . . The donee may release the power, that is to say, may bind herself not to exercise her discretion, whatever circumstances may arise, notwithstanding that the donor's intention was that she should do so (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—COFFIN v. COOPER (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 365; 5 New Rep. 459; 34 L. J. Ch. 629; 12 L. T. 106; 13 W. R. 571; 62 E. R. 660.

1146. ————]—Where there is a gift to A. for life with a power to A. to appoint among a class, but no gift to the class, & no gift over in default of appointment, the ct. is not bound, without more, to imply a gift to the class in default of the power being exercised.

In order to imply a gift there must be a clear indication in the will that testator intended the power to be regarded in the nature of a trust, so that the class or some of the class should take.

Testatrix bequeathed to her husband a life interest in certain real property, & gave "him power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children." The will contained no gift over in default of appointment. There were children, but the husband died intestate without having exercised the power of disposition:—Held: the power conferred on the husband was a mere power & not one coupled with a trust, & consequently there was no gift to the children by implication, & the heir-at-law of testatrix was entitled.—Re WEEKES' SETTLEMENT, [1897] 1 Ch. 289; 66 L. This case differs nothing from an interest vested in the brothers & sisters, subject to be defeated by a power of appointment in the residuary legatee. Unless the power of appointment in the one case, or power of exclusion in the other, be exercised, the brothers & sisters will take; & the fund must in the mean time be secured (LEACH, V.-C.).—*ROBINSON v. If a sum of money be given to A. for life, with remainder as he should by deed or will appoint & in default of appointment then to the children of A. the children of A. take in default of appointment whether they died in A.'s lifetime or not. Here the power was to be executed by deed or will; the tenant for life was not bound to suspend her judgment until her death in respect to the parties who were to take; therefore all the children who survived testator might have been objects of the power, & under the authorities entitled to a share where no appointment was made. Where words used are capable of a sensible effect, it is not safe to depart from them; & where vested interests first given by a will are defeated by an alternative form of expression not so plain & decisive, & which cannot take effect, the alternative branch of the sentence fails, & the preliminary expression which gave the vested interests takes effect (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—*FAULKNER v. The wife made no appointment:—Held: (1) the children alone took, to the exclusion of their parents; (2) they took per capita; (3) the fund vested in the children living at the death of testator, subject to its being either divested by the exercise of the power or by the birth of other children before the death of the tenant for life.—*PATTISON v. #### B. Necessity for Intention to Benefit.

1179. General rule—Intention to benefit necessary.—Testator by will bequeathed his residue equally among his seven children, & by a codicil revoked the share given by his will to one of his sons, & gave the same to his trustees upon trust at their uncontrolled discretion to apply the same or such parts thereof as they should think proper, for the personal maintenance & support or otherwise for the benefit of his son, or otherwise to apply the same in augmentation of the shares of testator's other children. The trustees did not exercise the power, but paid the share in question into ct. under Trustee Relief Act :—Held : there being no gift in favour of the person who would be benefited by the exercise of the power, as in Brown v. Higgs, No. 1168, ante, no gift could be implied, & therefore there was an intestacy with respect to the share.—Re EDDOWES (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 395; 5 L. T. 389; 7 Jur. N. S. 354; 62 E. R. 430.

1180. —. —.]—Re WEEKES' SETTLEMENT, No. 1146, ante.

1181. —. —.]—There is no inflexible rule that, if a testator confers a power to appoint among a class but makes no gift over in default of appointment, the ct. will imply a gift to the class in equal shares if the power be not exercised. It is only when upon the construction of the will testator shows an intention to create a trust in favour of the class that this implication will be made.

By his will testator devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion & to hold the net proceeds & the investments representing the same. In trust to pay the income to his wife during widowhood & after her death or remarriage in trust for his only son for life & from & after his death "In trust for such person or persons as my son . . . shall by will appoint, but I direct that such appointment must be confined to any relation or relations of mine of the whole blood." There was no gift over in default of appointment :—Held : the ct. would not imply a gift in default of appointment to the objects of the power, as the will did not show any intention on the part of testator to create a trust in favour of the objects of the power; & therefore, if the son released his power of appointment the property would go subject to the two life interests as on an intestacy.—Re COMBE, *COMBE v. 1184. —. —.]—Devise in 1817 of a freehold estate for lives renewable for ever, "to my son W. during his life, & after his death, to his lawful issue, in such manner, shares, & proportions as he, by deed or will, shall appoint, & for want of such appointment then to his issue equally, if more than one; & if only one child, to said child; & in failure of issue of W." to J. Another estate, consisting of fee simple lands, was devised in the same terms to son J.; & on failure of the issue of J., it was to go to W. J., & W., before the birth of any child to W., J. himself never married, joined in a recovery as to the lands devised to J., & to which W. afterwards succeeded in possession on J.'s death without issue. W. died, leaving four children, he had not executed any appointment, but during his life disposed of both descriptions of lands to creditors for value.

The estate to the issue does not arise by implication, but there is an express devise to the issue in default of appointment under the power. . . . In Sugden on Powers, it is said, "Where there is a gift over in default of appointment to the objects of the power, or to other persons, of course the words of the power cannot operate to vest any estate in the objects of it by implication if there be no appointment. . . ." Indeed the general rule of expressum facit cessare tacitum, seems plainly to exclude any increase of an estate by implication where there is an estate expressly limited as in the present case (CROMPTON, J.).—*RODDY v. She appointed part to children of testator's illegitimate brother:—Held: (1) "relatives" are legitimate relatives, where there is nothing on the face of the will itself to lead to a different conclusion; (2) the class of relatives, who were to take the share which was badly appointed, was to be ascertained at the death of the donee of the power, & not of testator.—Re SAVILLE'S TRUSTS (1866), 14 W. E., by her will, gave all her estate & interest to S., in the house in Hatton Garden, & after several legacies, the residue of her personal estate to deft. & two other persons, & made them exors.; but neither gave at or before her death, the goods in the house, or her husband's jewels to his relations.

The power to appoint is to arise in the event of her leaving one or more child or children living at her death, & in that event only; & taking this, in connection with the clause, by which the property is to revert to the settlor, in the event of there being no issue of the marriage living at her death, I think, that the true meaning of the settlement is, that those children only who were living at her death are entitled to take (LANGDALE, M.R.).—*WINN v. The granddaughter had several children & grandchildren, & by her will, purporting to be made in execution of the power, appointed the whole of the property amongst some only of her children:—Held: upon the construction of the above clause, that issue living at the death of the donee of the power of appointment were alone objects thereof; an exclusive appointment was not authorised, & the appointment was therefore invalid; & the issue of the granddaughter of every degree living at her death became entitled to the property on her death as tenants in common.—*STOLWORTHY v. The trustees declined to act:—Held: the fund must be divided equally between S. & her three children.

Where the ct. has to administer a fund, the distribution of which is intrusted to the discretion of one who refuses to exercise it, the only distribution the ct. can make is to divide it, equally, between the objects of testatrix's bounty, it being impossible to divide it in such a manner as the donee of the power should think fit (ROMILLY, M.R.).—IZOD v. 1229. ———.]—As tenants in common.]—Where there is a general power of appointment among children, & the appointment from any circumstances becomes void, the children take as tenants in common.

A., having been indebted to the estate of B. in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bkpt., voluntarily executed to C., the widow of B., a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself & children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards, A. executed to C. another bond for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use & benefit of herself & children only, in what proportions among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent whatsoever:—Held: the widow took a life interest in the money secured by the bonds, & the principal, after her decease, became payable among the children, in such manner, & in such proportions, as she should direct; & the widow having made an exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children, such appointment was void, & all the children took as tenants in common.—FOWLER v. HUNTER (1829), 3 Y. & J. 506, Ex. Ch.

1230. ———.]—Testator gave his real & personal estate to his wife for life, & after her decease "unto & amongst his three children P., E., & T., & their lawful issue, in such proportions, manner & form, & subject to such charges, etc., as his wife should appoint":—Held: in default of appointment, the children took estates tail, & an appointment to a deceased child & the heirs of her body was invalid.—MARTIN v. SWANNELL (1840), 2 Beav. 249; 9 L. J. Ch. 174; 48 E. R. 1176.

1231. ———.]—Testator gave £3,000 to his exors. upon trust for the benefit of M. during her life, & from & immediately after her death "in trust for the benefit of her children, to do that which they, my exors., may think most to their advantage." in the events which happened, as she should by deed or will appoint. In 1843 the husband joined with his wife in appointing part of the trust funds to secure a debt due from him to A., & notice of that appointment was given to the two then surviving trustees of the settlement. In 1848 the then surviving trustee of it was released from the trusts, & three new trustees appointed. The two survivors of those trustees, & afterwards the sole survivor of them, joined with the wife in various dealings with the trust funds. In 1867 the wife appointed a portion of the funds to the sole surviving trustee of the settlement by way of indemnity to him, & the estate of the other trustee who had dealt with the funds at her request. There were other subsequent dealings with the funds. Bills were filed to administer various incumbrancers. The sole surviving trustee of the settlement alleged that he had had no notice of the appointment of 1843 :—Held : the appointees under that deed were entitled in priority to all other incumbrancers on the funds.—*PHIPPS v. ## Part I.—Formal Requirements.

SECT. 1.—REGISTRATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

Obligation to register.—See Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60), ss. 9, 13.

Newspapers of which registration required.—See Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60), ss. 1, 18.

Particulars required.—See Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60), ss. 1, 7, 9, 11, 12.

1. Object of registration.—The object of the registration of newspaper printers is not only to hold out the person so registered as liable to criminal proceedings, etc., for what appears in the newspaper, but also for goods supplied for the use or carrying on of the paper.—GLENNISSON v. ROBERTSON (1867), 10 L. T. 298.

2. —.—A newspaper is within Copyright Act, 1842 (c. 45), & requires registration under that Act in order to give the proprietor the copyright in its contents & so enable him to sue in respect of a piracy.—WALTER v. HOWE (1881), 17 Ch. D. 708; 50 L. J. Ch. 621; 44 L. T. 727; 29 W. R. 776.

Annotations.—Apld. Cate v. Devon & Exeter Constitutional Newspaper Co. (1889), 40 Ch. D. 500. Consd. Trade Auxiliary Co. v. Middlesbrough & District Tradesmen's Protection Assocn. (1889), 40 Ch. D. 425; Walter v. Lane, [1900] A. C. 539. Refd. Asiflov. Lawrence & Bullen, [1903] 1 Ch. 318.

3. Sufficiency of registration.—A periodical or magazine is a book within Copyright Act, 1842 (c. 45), s. 24, & its proprietor, if he has, pursuant to sect. 19, registered the first number at Stationers' Hall, is entitled to restrain the publication without his consent in a separate form of a serial published in successive numbers of the periodical, the copyright of which belongs to him under sect. 18, although neither the serial nor the first number containing it has been separately registered.—HENDERSON v. MAXWELL (1876), 4 Ch. D. 163; 46 L. J. Ch. 59; 25 W. R. 66; subsequent proceedings (1877), 5 Ch. D. 892.

Omission to register.—See Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60), s. 10.

4. — Owners not deprived of copyright.—Pltfs. in this case, C, the T. co., & P., were respectively the proprietors of three newspapers or periodicals called The Commercial Compendium, Perry's Gazette, & Stubbs' Weekly Gazette. All these papers were published for the protection of traders by giving them information about the position of persons with whom they might have to deal, & consisted mainly of lists of bkpcies., bills of sale, & deeds of arrangement registered under the Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52). The three pltfs. jointly employed clerks to obtain these lists from the Govt. offices, & bore jointly the expense of the fees for searching the registers & other expenses of making out their list. All these papers were registered under Copyright Act, 1842 (c. 45), but they were not registered under Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60). Pltf., C., besides publishing the Commercial Compendium in the ordinary way sold a certain number of copies to various trade protection societies, among others to the London Assocn. for the Protection of Trade. The numbers sold to this assocn. had the title Commercial Compendium omitted & “Commercial, Private, & Confidential List” substituted, & in this shape was circulated by the assocn. among its subscribers. Defts. were the proprietors of certain newspapers published in the West of England. They subscribed to the London Assocn. for the Protection of Trade, & on receipt of the weekly Commercial, Private & Confidential List they copied the deeds of arrangement registered by persons resident in the counties of Devon & Cornwall, & published them in their own paper. This was a motion by pltfs. to restrain this publication.—Held: non-registration of a newspaper under the Newspaper Libel & Registration Act, 1881 (c. 60), does not deprive the owners of their

PART I. SECT. 1.

a. Failure to register—What penalties can be recovered.—Under Printers & Newspapers Registration Statute, 1864 (No. 212), s. 26, cumulative penalties can be recovered for publishing separate issues of a newspaper without having entered into the recognisance required by sect. 19.—*A.-G. v. given by Libel Act.—SKRYHA v. TELEGRAM PRINTING CO. (1914), 29 W. L. R. 505; 7 W. W. R. 187; 20 D. L. R. 692; 24 Man. L. R. 721.—CAN.

pression is to be a certain number of copies, if a fire break out & consume the premises before the whole number have been worked off, the printer cannot recover anything, although a part have actually been delivered.—ADLARD v. BOOTH (1835), 7 C. & P. 108, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 1 Bing. N. C. 693.

12. Libellous matter—Refusal to complete printing.—Pltf., a printer, verbally agreed to print for deft. five hundred copies of a treatise, to which a dedication was to be prefixed, at a certain price per sheet, including paper. The treatise was printed, & after the proof sheet of the dedication was revised by deft. & returned to pltf., he, for the first time, discovered that it contained libellous matter, & refused to complete the printing of it:—Held: as the dedication was libellous pltf. was justified in refusing to complete the printing of it, & was entitled to recover for printing the treatise.—CLAY v. YATES (1856), 1 H. & N. 73; 25 L. J. Ex. 237; 27 L. T. O. S. 126; 2 Jur. N. S. 908; 4 W. R. 557; 150 E. R. 1123.

—Effect of omission of name.—See Nos. 5, 6, ante.

13. Termination of employment—Four weeks' notice or wages in lieu of notice—Usage of trade between printers & newspaper proprietors.—Semble: there is in fact a usage of trade between the printers & proprietors of newspapers, that the latter should give to the former four weeks' notice of taking the work from them, or pay them four weeks' wages; but such usage seems not to be mutual.—CUNNINGHAM v. FONBIANQUE (1833), 6 C. & P. 44, N. P.

Usages in printing trade.—See CUSTOM & USAGES, Vol. XVII., p. 66, Nos. 693–695.

14. Engagement of employees—Whether agreement stamp necessary—Overseer.—An overseer in a printing office is an artificer within the Stamp Acts.—BISHOP v. LETTS (1858), 1 F. & F. 401, N. P.

15. Wages of employees—Scale for composing advertisements—How far award binding.—In London, the business of printing is regulated by committees of masters & compositors, who make rules, which are binding upon the trade; & by the rules relating to the arbitration committee, a barrister is to preside, & in certain cases decide:—Held: (1) a compositor who entered upon his employment after the barrister had decided upon the construction of a rule, in a reference to which the compositor was not a party, was not bound by the barrister's construction of the rule; (2) under the trade rule relating to the wrappers, a compositor is entitled to charge according to the scale for each page wherein new matter is inserted with a standing advertisement; & in such case, although the standing advertisements, if they had been collected together, would have made up one or more complete pages, he is not limited to charge only for time in making up.—HILL v. LEVEY (1858), 3 H. & N. 702; 28 L. J. Ex. 80; 23 J. P. 36; sub nom. LEVEY v. HILL, 4 Jur. N. S. 589; 6 W. R. 691, Ex. Ch.

16. Liability for libel—Indemnity not enforceable.—Defts. gave to ptfcs., who were printing & publishing a paper for them, an undertaking that they, defts., would indemnify ptfcs. against any claims whatever that might be made against them in respect of any libel that might appear in the paper. A libel was inserted in the paper with the knowledge of ptfcs. staff, & an action was brought against ptfcs. in respect thereof which they had to compromise by paying a certain sum of money & costs. In an action on the undertaking to indemnify:—Held: such a contract could not be enforced in law.—SMITH (W. II.) & SON v. CLINTON & HARRIS (1908), 99 L. T. 840; 25 T. L. R. 34.

SECT. 1.—EDITORS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

18. Legal interest in matter published—& original report from which taken—Inspection.—In an action against the proprietors of a newspaper for the breach of a contract to employ pltf. as sub-editor, defts. justified the dismissal of pltf. on the ground of his having, from improper motives, lent himself to the insertion of a garbled report of proceedings in a ct. of justice. The ct.

refused to allow pltf. to inspect, & take copies of, the original report & of the alleged garbled statement, he having no recognised legal interest therein.—POWELL v. BRADBURY (1847), 4 C. B. 541; 136 E. R. 619; subsequent proceedings (1849), 7 C. B. 201.

19. Subjection to control by proprietor.—(1) The proprietors of a copyright in a journal are not bound to insert any articles which the editor may think fit, & the ct. refused to restrain them by

PART II. SECT. 2.

g. Meaning of word "publisher"
—Whether seller of book included in term.—The word "publisher" has been used in Printing Presses & Newspapers Act, 1867, in the restricted sense, & does not include a person who merely sells a book or a paper.—R. v. BANKA FARMI (1896), 1 L. R. 23 Calc. 414.—IND.

h.———A press association receiving telegrams & sending them to injunction, from interfering with the editor, or from inserting, or altering, or omitting articles, which he might think advisable to be inserted therein.

(2) Where the agreement between the proprietors & the editor provided that the title should not be altered without mutual consent, & the name of the editor was placed upon the title page, & the proprietors afterwards discontinued placing it there, the ct. refused to restrain them by injunction from omitting it in future, on the ground that the name of the editor on the title page is no part of the title.—CROOKES v. PETTER (1860), 3 L. T. 225; 6 Jur. N. S. 1131.

21. Right to refuse to deliver manuscript — Employer intending fraud on public—Untrue title page.]—Where a person who had undertaken to edit a guide book to London, refused to deliver up his manuscript, for which he had received the agreed price, unless his employer consented to abandon his intention of stating on the title page that the work was "edited" by a person who had taken no part in the preparation of the work, "assisted" by the true editor:—Held: the editor could not be compelled to carry out his agreement under circumstances which involved the committal of a fraud upon the public.—POST v. MARSH (1880), 16 Ch. D. 395; 50 L. J. Ch. 287; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

SUB-SECT. 3.—LIABILITIES.

22. Libel—Action against editor—Libellous article inserted under instruction of association employing editor—Availability of association's funds in defending action.]—A nursing assn. incorporated by royal charter were the proprietors & publishers of a newspaper on nursing & employed one of the members of the assocn. as honorary editor. An action for libel having been brought against the editor alone in respect of an article inserted in the newspaper under the express instructions of the assocn.:—Held: as a matter of ordinary business, & apart from any question as to the legal right of the editor to be indemnified, the funds of the assocn. could be lawfully applied in undertaking the defence of the action.—BREAY v. ROYAL BRITISH NURSES ASSOCN., [1897] 2 Ch. 272; 66 L. J. Ch. 587; 76 L. T. 735; 46 W. R. 86; 13 T. L. R. 467, C. A.

23. — Action against proprietor—Editor not liable to indemnify proprietor.]—Seem: the proprietor of a newspaper, convicted & fined for the publication of a libel in the paper, inserted without his knowledge & consent by the editor, cannot recover against the editor the damages sustained by such conviction.—COLBURN v. PATMORE (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 73; 4 Tyr. 877; 3 L. J. Ex. 317; 149 E. R. 999.

SUB-SECT. 4.—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT.

24. Length of notice to terminate engagement—Special agreement.]—Declaration stated that, in consideration that pltf. would enter into defts. employ, to wit in the capacity of editor of a newspaper, at & for a certain salary, to wit at the rate of £400 per annum, & would continue in their service till the expiration of three months after notice to determine the contract, defts. promised to employ him in the capacity, at the salary, & to continue him in the service till the expiration of three months after notice, etc., or to pay him a proportionate part of the salary for three months: but that pltf. had been dismissed without notice or the three months' salary. Defts. paid £37 10s. into ct. generally. On the trial, pltf. did not prove the contract for £400, but relied on the payment into ct. as an admission of the amount:—Held: the sum of £400 specified as the rate of salary, not being material in itself, & being laid under a videlicet, pltf. would not have been bound to prove it as laid, if non assumpsit had been pleaded: & therefore, that the payment into ct. did not bind defts. as an admission of that rate of salary. But the capacity in which pltf. engaged to serve was material, & though laid under a videlicet, must, on non assumpsit, have been proved as laid, & was admitted by the payment into ct.—COOPER v. BLICK (1842), 2 Q. B. 915; 2 Gal. & Dav. 295; 11 L. J. Q. B. 85; 6 Jur. 368; 114 E. R. 354.

Annotation:—Mentd. Harris v. Phillips (1851), 10 C. B. 650.

Annotation:—Reftd. Fox-Bourne v. Vernon (1894), 10 T. L. R. 647.

26. — Reasonable notice—Six months.]—The question for the jury is whether pltf. is entitled to twelve months' notice, or whether six months' notice is such a notice as defts. are legally entitled to give pltf. . . . The jury had no question of "custom" to consider, for "custom" in its strict legal sense is a uniform & universal practice so well defined & recognised that contracting parties must be assumed to have had it in their minds when they contracted. The fact that in a large percentage of cases there were special agreements shows that no such universal custom exists (LORD RUSSELL, C.J.).—FOX-BOURNE v. VERNON & CO., LTD. (1894), 10 T. L. R. 647.

27. — — Three months—Where journal not leading journal.]—From the evidence of the witnesses an editor appears to have almost sacred qualities. An editor's dignity is such that he is entitled to a year's notice. I give no opinion as to whether the notice applies to leading journals of this country but it is clear no such notice is applicable to a journal like Financial Answers. . . . I think I shall be doing justice if I award three months' notice (CHARLES, J.).—BAKER v. MANDEVILLE (1896), 13 T. L. R. 71.

28. — Where editorial functions involved.—Pltf., who contributed to a newspaper a weekly column of literary matter for children under the nom de plume of Aunt Naomi:—Held: (1) pltf. was entitled to a declaration that she was the owner of the nom de plume; (2) on the facts, pltf.'s engagement involved the performance of editorial & managerial functions outside the scope of an ordinary contributor, & she was entitled to reasonable notice, which was agreed to be three months, before the engagement was terminated.—LANDA v. GREENBERG (1908), 24 T. L. R. 441; 52 Sol. Jo. 354.

29. — Twelve months.—In an action by an editor against the proprietors of a newspaper for wrongful dismissal, there was no evidence of any custom as to the length of notice to which in the absence of express agreement an editor was entitled, & the jury found for pltf. on the basis that he was entitled to twelve months' notice:—Held: in the circumstances of the case it could not be said that the view of the jury was unreasonable.—GRUNDY v. SUN PRINTING & PUBLISHING ASSOCN. (1916), 33 T. L. R. 77, C. A.

30. — Sub-editor — Six months.—A sub-editor of a daily paper found by a jury to be entitled to six months' notice apart from special agreement.—CHAMBERLAIN v. BENNETT (1892), 8 T. L. R. 234.

31. — Film editor — Performing duties analogous to those of newspaper editor.—Pltf. was engaged by defts. as editor of a reel film of current events, his duties being to send out operators for the purpose of photographing current events, to make up the stories, & arrange, describe, cut down, trim, & condense them. He made out posters describing the contents, & the stories were sent round to the cinema halls & thrown on the screens with the captions & explanatory matter which pltf. had written. Defts. terminated pltf.'s employment by giving him one month's notice, & pltf. brought an action claiming that as editor he was entitled to six months' notice according to the custom of journalism:—Held: though pltf. performed duties analogous to those of a newspaper editor, yet, as there was no evidence that the customary notice applied in a case which was only analogous to that of a newspaper editor, the action failed.—MCCABE v. PATHE FRERES CINEMA, LTD. (1919), 35 T. L. R. 313.

32. Customary length of engagement.—(1) In an action for wrongfully dismissing the editor of a newspaper, the declaration stated that he was engaged for a year. There was no direct evidence as to the time for which pltf. was engaged:—Held: pltf. might go into evidence to show a custom for editors of newspapers to be engaged for a year, unless there was an express stipulation to the contrary.

(2) Semble: the custom is, that the engagements of editors, sub-editors, & reporters of newspapers are for a year, unless there be an express stipulation to the contrary, & this custom is binding on both parties.—HOLCROFT v. BARBER & WATSON (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 4, N. P.

33. — Whether applicable to newly started publications.—(1) A. was engaged as editor of a new periodical publication by B. at a salary to be paid weekly. The publication was abandoned by B. soon after its commencement. In an action by A. against B. for dismissing him before the termination of a year, a usage was proved that such a hiring was annual with regard to established periodicals:—Held: the jury were properly directed to consider whether such usage was applicable to a newly started publication.—BAXTER v. NURSE (1844), 6 Man. & G. 935; 7 Scott, N. R. 801; 13 L. J. C. P. 82; 2 L. T. O. S. 311; 8 Jur. 273; 134 E. R. 1171.

34. Recovery of salary in lieu of notice — In addition to arrears of salary.—When the custom is shown that parties engaged upon a daily newspaper are, upon dismissal or the stoppage of the paper, entitled to a month's salary in lieu of notice, they may prove accordingly in addition to arrears of salary then actually due.—Re HUTTON, Ex p. ALLPAS, Ex p. CHIPCHASE (1867), 17 L. T. 179; 16 W. R. 142.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PROPERTY IN ARTICLES SUPPLIED FOR REPRODUCTION.

Rights in regard to manuscript—Copyright based on payment.—See COPYRIGHT, Vol. XIII., pp. 186, 193, 194, Nos. 216–219, 282, 283.

36. — Publisher's right to republish — In altered form.—If A., being the author of a law book, sell the copyright to B., & B., publish a third edition of the work edited by another, but not stated to be so, & which purchasers were likely to suppose was edited by A., such edition having errors & mistakes in it, calculated to injure the reputation of A. as an author:—Held: an action lies by A., against B.—ARCHBOLD v. SWETT (1832), 5 C. & P. 219; 1 Mood. & R. 162, N. P.

38. — — — — ——GILBERT v. BOOSEY & Co. (1889), 87 L. T. Jo. 355.

39. — — — — ——This was a motion on behalf of pltf., an author, to restrain deft., a publisher, from publishing or selling a certain book otherwise than in the form in which it was prepared by the author, or from representing that pltf. was the author of the book published by deft. The book was originally published in its complete form in 1880. In 1892 the publisher issued an edition of the book, omitting the preface, table of contents, introduction, bibliographical notice, & index. The ground of the motion was that the publication of the book in a mutilated form caused an injury to pltf.'s reputation as an author:—Held: pltf.'s remedy in law was libel.—LEE v. GIBBINGS (1892), 67 L. T. 263; 8 T. L. R. 773; 36 Sol. Jo. 713.

Sect. 2.—Authors: Sub-sect. 2, A. &amp; B.]

SUB-SECT. 2.—PUBLISHING AGREEMENT.

A. In General.

40. Nature of contract — Whether personal contract.—Publishers agreed with an author to print, reprint & publish a work by him at their own risk, on the terms of dividing equally with him any profits that there might be after payment of all expenses: & that if all the copies should be sold & another edition should be required, the author should make all necessary alterations & additions, & the publishers should print & publish a second & subsequent editions on the same terms. After the publication of the first edition the firm of the publishers was changed, & the interest of the old firm in the work was expressed to be assigned to the new firm. The author prepared & the new firm published a second edition without any new agreement being entered into. Afterwards, a partner in the new firm, the only remaining member of the old firm, became bkpt., & his assignees, with the solvent partner, sold & assigned to other law publishers all the interest of the firm in the work & all the unsold copies:—Held: the purchasers had no share in the copyright of the work, & were not entitled to an injunction to restrain the publication of a third edition by another publisher with the author's concurrence, the agreement being held to be of a personal nature on both sides, & the benefit of it not assignable by either party without the other's consent.—STEVENS v. BENNING (1855), 6 De C. M. & G. 223; 3 Eq. Rep. 457; 24 L. J. Ch. 158; 24 L. T. O. S. 205; 1 Jur. N. S. 74; 3 W. R. 149; 43 E. R. 1218, L. J.J.

41. — — — — —]—READE v. BENTLEY, No. 65, post.

42. — — — — —]—The joint authors of a book, one of whom composed the letter press, & the other sketched the drawings from which the illustrations were engraved, entered into a verbal agreement with a firm of publishers, by which the firm were to engrave the illustrations & to print & publish the book. If the publication resulted in a loss the firm were to bear the whole of it; if there was a profit, they were to pay half of it to the authors. The profits were to be ascertained after deducting the cost of the engraving, printing, & publication, but without allowing any sum to the authors for the illustrations & letter press. The book was published, & the publication resulted in a profit:—Held: the agreement was merely personal to the individuals then composing the publishers' firm, & the benefit of it could not, without the consent of the authors, be assigned by the publishers' firm to a firm which had succeeded to their business, but which contained none of the partners of the original firm.—HOLE v. BRADBURY (1879), 12 Ch. D. 886; 48 L. J. Ch. 673; 41 L. T. 153; 28 W. R. 39.

43. — — — — —]—Pltf. agreed to act as reader & literary adviser to deft., who was a publisher. Subsequently pltf. wrote a book which was to be published by deft., it being agreed that the profits should be shared equally between them. Several editions of the book were published, & subsequently deft. became bkpt.:—Held: the agreement as to sharing profits did not vest the copyright in the book in deft.; & the contract was a personal one, & therefore, deft.'s trustee in bkpcy. had not the right of reprinting & publishing the book.—LUCAS v. MONCRIEFF (1905), 21 T. L. R. 683.

44. — — — — —]—Agreement between author & limited company.—The principle established by Stevens v. Benning, No. 40, ante, Reade v. Bentley, No. 65, post, & Hole v. Bradbury, No. 42, ante, that a publishing agreement between an author & a publisher, or a firm of publishers, is personal to the individuals entering into it, & that the benefit of such an agreement is not assignable without the author's consent, applies equally to the case of a similar agreement between an author & a limited co.—GRIFFITH v. TOWER PUBLISHING CO., LTD. & MONCRIEFF, [1897] 1 Ch. 21; 66 L. J. Ch. 12; 75 L. T. 330; 45 W. R. 73; 13 T. L. R. 9; 41 Sol. Jo. 29.

45. — — — — —]—Agreement containing option to publish author's future work — Specific performance.—Pltfs. entered into a written agreement with deft., E., an authoress, for the publication of a novel already written by her, & by the same agreement secured an option to publish her "next three books" upon certain royalty terms therein contained. The agreement provided that if they exercised their option in the case of any of her next three books, pltfs. were during the legal term of the copyright to have the exclusive right of producing & publishing the book within a defined area together with the entire control of the publication & terms of sale of the book, & also the right of suing in respect of infringement of copyright. The agreement also provided that E. was not without the consent of pltfs. to publish, or allow to be published, any abridgment, translation or dramatised version of the book, & that on the determination of the agreement in certain events therein specified the right to print & publish the book was to revert to E. who was then to be entitled to be registered as the proprietor thereof. In breach of this agreement E. agreed with defts. C. & co., a rival firm of publishers, who had notice of pltfs.' agreement, to print & publish her next novel. In an action by pltfs. to restrain both defts. from publishing the novel until it had been first submitted to pltfs. for their acceptance:—Held: (1) the agreement was not a contract of personal service but was a contract by E. to sell the products of her labour or industry, of which the ct. would grant specific performance by restraining her from disposing of the novel in breach of her agreement with pltfs.; (2) by virtue of their agreement & Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 1, pltfs. would upon exercising their option in respect of any of the specified books thereby become equitable owners of a part of, or of an interest in, the copyright thereof, & until they exercised it they had an option to become entitled to an interest in such copyright which option they were entitled to protect against E. & also against C. & co., who had notice of pltfs.' agreement.—MACDONALD v. EYLES, [1921] 1 Ch. 631; 90 L. J. Ch. 248; 124 L. T. 625; 37 T. L. R. 187; 65 Sol. Jo. 275.

46. — — — — —]—Whether agreement implied as to future editions.—An authoress, who was a married woman, entered into a verbal agreement with a publisher that he should publish a work at his own expense, & pay her a royalty on the copies sold. The work was accordingly published, but, before all the copies were sold, the authoress arranged with another publisher to bring out a second edition of the same work:—Held: no agreement could be implied on the part of the authoress not to bring out another edition until all the first edition was sold, & a suit against the authoress & her husband & the second publisher to restrain such publication could not be sustained. —WARNE v. ROUTLEDGE (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 497; 43 L. J. Ch. 604; 30 L. T. 857; 22 W. R. 750.

47. — Sale of copyright on royalty terms—Analogy to sale of goods.—An author sold the copyright of his book to a publisher upon the terms that the publisher should print & publish it & should pay him certain royalties upon the sales of the book. The publisher became bkpt., & the trustee in bkpcy. carried on bkpt.'s business until he sold it as a going concern with all copyrights. During the time the trustee carried on the business sales of the book were effected, & the trustee received the proceeds of these sales. The author claimed to be paid in full the royalties on these sales:—Held: the transaction between the author & the publisher was analogous to that of a sale of goods at a price varying in amount & depending on certain events, & the author was only entitled to prove in the bkpcy. for the damages sustained by breach of the contract.—*Re GRANT RICHARDS, Ex p. 50. Contract for appearance of articles in particular publication—Rights of author—Periodical discontinued—Completion of treatise unnecessary.—An author was engaged to write for a certain sum an article to appear among others in a work called The Juvenile Library. Before he had completed his article, & before any portion of it was published, the work in which it was to appear was discontinued:—Held: the publishers were not entitled to claim the completion of the article, it might be published in a separate form for general readers, but were bound to pay the author a reasonable sum for the part which he had prepared. —PLANCHE v. COLBURN (1831), 5 C. & P. 58, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 8 Bing. 14.

51. — — — — — Separate publication restrained.—Pltf. obtained an injunction to restrain defts. from printing & publishing an article or essay as a separate or distinct work or otherwise than as a part of a work called the Encyclopædia Metropolitana. Pltf. stated that the article was written solely for the Encyclopædia, that no agreement had been executed between him & the publishers, & that he did not intend to give any additional right beyond that of publishing the article in the Encyclopædia. A motion to dissolve, on the ground that pltf. had parted with all his right in the article, & that, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, it was the custom of the trade that articles furnished to publications of this nature might be reprinted in a separate form, was refused, with costs.—*HEREFORD (Bp.) v. The books sold to be accounted for at the trade sale price, unless it should be thought advisable to dispose of any copies or of the remainder at a lower price, which was left to the publisher's discretion:—Held: it was to be inferred from the agreement, that the publisher was to fix the selling price of the book.—*READE v. year, at £10 per week for each number, to contain about the same quantity as was sent under a former similar engagement, & to receive the first number on Apr. 22, 1855, & to continue to receive one number weekly during one year, conditionally that F. should not write for any other newspaper published at less than 6d. F. accepted, received £20 deposit, & wrote regularly for some weeks; then, went to Paris, sent an abrupt conclusion of the then current tale in a small quantity of manuscript, refused to proceed with his engagement with S., & entered into another engagement with C. S. thereupon stopped his payments to F., & employed another author to conclude the half-finished tale:—Held: (1) the above engagement was a yearly engagement, & could not be closed by F., as a weekly engagement; (2) the condition as to F. not engaging elsewhere was valid; (3) under the circumstances, S. had behaved reasonably, & not so as to deprive himself of his remedy by injunction.—STIFF v. CASSELL (1856), 2 Jur. N. S. 348.

57. — Action for damages — Measure of damages.]—A. agrees to supply B. with a manuscript work to be printed by B., the profits of which are to be equally divided. B. may maintain an action at law against A. for refusing to supply the manuscript. For this is not an action for partnership profits, but for refusing to contribute the labour of debt. towards the attainment of profits. It would be a good defence to such an action, to show that the intended publication was of an illegal nature, but this is not to be presumed, the work itself not being produced.

The main question therefore, for your consideration is the amount of the damages; you will no doubt indemnify plffs. against the expenses which they have incurred in paper & in printing; it is a waste of time to say that to this they are entitled in the strictest justice. The sum of £90 has been stated by the witnesses as the amount of the profit which would probably have been derived from the first edition, & it is doubtful whether it would have reached a second (LORD ELLENBOROUGH).—*GALE v. 60. By publisher — Injunction — Breach of agreement for engagement as editor of all editions.]—An author & publisher entered into an agreement in 1894 under which the author was to edit the whole of the plays of Shakespeare, to be called the Temple Shakespeare, & was to write an introduction, notes, & glossary for each play. The publisher was to pay the author a royalty, & the copyright was vested in the publisher. Clause 10 provided: "In the event of a cheaper or other form of edition of any or either of the plays being thought advisable by the publisher, it shall form the subject of an agreement with the author on similar pro rata terms to those embodied herein." The publication was very successful, & in 1899 a large Temple Shakespeare was produced, the notes & glossary being identical with those in the smaller edition, but illustrations were added; a royalty was paid to the author upon this edition. Discussion took place as to the production of a Shakespeare for schools, & the author stated that in Mar. 1901, a definite agreement was made as to the royalty to be paid him in respect of this edition, & denied that he ever failed or neglected or threatened to abandon its production. The publisher produced a Temple Shakespeare for schools with notes, introduction, & glossary written by a person other than the author. The author applied for an injunction restraining the issue of this edition, or, in the alternative, for damages for breach of the agreement:—Held: there had been an agreement that the author should be paid a royalty on the school Shakespeare, & he had always been ready to perform the work, & the publisher had committed a breach of the agreement of 1894, supplemented by the verbal agreement of 1901; it was not a case for an injunction, but there must be a reference to chambers to assess the damages.—GOLLANCZ v. DENT (1903), 88 L. T. 358.

61. — Damages — Assessment of damages.]—A firm of publishers agreed with the authors of a series of articles to print & publish the articles, first in a magazine on certain terms, & after that in the form of a book on the terms of paying the authors 4d. for every copy of the book sold. The form & price of the book, the number of copies to be printed, & the date of the publication were left to the discretion of the publishers. They printed & published the articles in the magazine upon the agreed terms, but refused to print or publish them in the form of a book. In an action by the authors for damages for breach of the contract:—Held: they [defts.] were bound to publish such a number as was reasonable in all the circumstances, & the damages were to be measured by the amount plffs. lost through defts.' refusal to do this.—ABRAHAM v. HERBERT REIACH, LTD., [1922] 1 K. B. 477; 91 L. J. K. B. 404; 126 L. T. 546; 60 Sol. Jo. 390, C. A.

C. Accounts.

62. When ordered.]—Semble: this ct. will entertain a suit instituted by an author against his publisher for an account, where the latter refuses to render an account altogether; but if such publisher renders an account showing a certain balance due from the author for which he brings an action, this ct. will not, in the absence of fraud or misstatement, allow a suit to be instituted by the author praying an account & an injunction, but will leave the question to be determined at law.—BARRY v. STEVENS (1802), 31 Beav. 258; 31 L. J. Ch. 785; 6 L. T. 568; 9 Jur. N. S. 143; 10 W. R. 822; 54 E. R. 1137.

63. Items in account—Percentage to publisher on wholesale price—Effect of publisher receiving retail price.]—Defts., who were publishers & book-sellers, made a written offer to publish a book for pltf., who was an author, on the terms that they would "account" for all sold copies "at the wholesale trade price, less their commission of 15 per cent.," pltf. to pay the cost of printing & binding. Subsequently defts. orally agreed, as the ct. found, to publish & sell the book on the terms of accounting to pltf. for all moneys received by them less a remuneration of 15 per cent. The book was published at 5s. net, & the wholesale trade price was 3s. 4d., but in some cases defts. received more than 3s. 4d. from retail purchasers in their book-selling department. Defts. claimed to retain not only their commission of 15 per cent. but also the sums which they had received in excess of 3s. 4d. a copy. In an action by pltf. for a declaration that defts. were bound to account for the actual sale price of all copies, less 15 per cent., defts. alleged that there was no "wholesale trade price," & that it varied with different customers, & that there was a usage entitling them to retain the excess over the 3s. 4d. :—Held: pltf. was entitled to the declaration in view of the finding of the ct. as to the terms of the oral agreement, & if the real contract between the parties was assumed to be contained in the written offer by defts., then although the relationship between the parties was not that of principal & agent, but of principals, yet the effect of the use of the terms "account," "price," etc., in defts.' written offer was that the same result followed & defts. were bound to account to pltf. for all sold copies at the prices actually received by them, less 15 per cent.—*KITSON v. In 1866, such magazine not having appeared, M., in ignorance of what H. had done, projected a magazine with the same name, & incurred considerable expense in preparing it, & extensively advertising it in Aug. & Sept., as about to appear in Oct. H. knowing of this, made hasty preparations for bringing out his own magazine before that of M. could appear, & in the meantime accepted an order from M. for advertising M.'s magazine on the covers of his own publications, & the first day on which he informed M. that he objected to his publishing a magazine under that name was Sept. 25, on which day the first number of H.'s magazine appeared. M.'s magazine appeared in Oct.:—Held: (1) M.'s advertisements & expenditure did not give him any exclusive right to the use of the name Belgravia, & he could not restrain H. from publishing a magazine under the same name, the first number of which appeared before M. had published his; (2) H.'s registering the title of an intended publication could not give him a copyright in that name, & in the circumstances of the case, he had not acquired any right to restrain M. from using the name, as being H.'s trade mark.—*MAXWELL v. 80. — Three days' publication.]—Pltfs., on Feb. 3, 1888, published the first number of a newspaper, & registered it at Stationers' Hall on the next day. No advertisement had been issued that a newspaper under that name was about to be published. On Feb. 6, defts. published the first number of a newspaper with the same name. Very few copies of pltfs.' paper had then been sold:—Held: pltfs. could not restrain defts. from publishing their newspaper under that name, for the registration at Stationers' Hall gave pltfs. no exclusive right to the name, & a title to it by user & reputation could not be acquired by a publication for three days with a very small sale.—*LICENSED VICTUALLERS' NEWSPAPER CO. v. ### SUB-SECT. 2.—INFRINGEMENT OF RIGHT OF PROPERTY—INJUNCTION.

A. In General.

81. Name of proprietor not registered — Effect of.]—(1) Pltf. purchased & became the proprietor of a weekly newspaper called the Britannia, which he afterwards amalgamated with another weekly paper called the John Bull. The new publication was issued under the name of the John Bull & Britannia. Before the amalgamation took place notice thereof was published in the Britannia, of which deft. M. was printer, publisher, & sub-editor. After the amalgamation, on the next usual day of publication of the Britannia, deft. M. issued a publication called the True Britannia, resembling in size, & as a continuation of the Britannia. Upon bill to restrain deft. M. from publishing the True Britannia to the injury of pltf. Injunction granted.

(2) Pltf. had not registered his name at the Stamp Office, under the requirements of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, as proprietor either of the Britannia or the John Bull & Britannia:—Held: pltf. was not thereby disentitled to protection, if the other circumstances were such as to entitle him to the relief which he asked.—PROWETT v. MORTIMER (1856), 27 L. T. O. S. 132; 2 Jur. N. S. 414; 4 W. R. 519.

B. Grounds for Granting Injunction.

(a) In General.

82. Colourable variation in form & title.—PROWETT v. MORTIMER, No. 81, ante.

83. Use of similar name—Calculated to deceive.—An injunction will not be granted to restrain a new journal from adopting a name similar to, but not identical with, that of an existing one, provided that, all things considered, the new journal have such distinctive marks that persons of ordinary intelligence would not mistake it for the old one. On an application for an interlocutory injunction by the publisher of Punch against the publishers of a new journal called Punch & Judy, with a different frontispiece, different price, & different day of actual publication, to restrain them from using the word Punch in the name of their journal, there being also a comic journal of the name of Judy:—Held: the circumstances were not such as to justify the ct. in granting an injunction.—BRADBURY v. BEETON (1869), 39 L. J. Ch. 57; 21 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 33.

Annotations.—Consd. Weldon v. Dicks (1878), 10 Ch. D. 247. Mentd. Lee v. Halsey (1869), 21 L. T. 546.

84. ———. — The use for many years of two words of common use, Newcastle Chronicle, as the name of a newspaper does not give the owner of the newspaper an exclusive right to the use of one of the words, Chronicle, so as to entitle him to restrain deft. from publishing in the same town a newspaper having for its name the word Chronicle, in conjunction with another, that is to say, Sporting Chronicle; the appearance & contents of the two papers being dissimilar, there being no evidence of any one having been deceived, & no apparent intention to deceive on the part of deft. —COWEN v. HULTON (1882), 46 L. T. 897, C. A.

85. ———. — Where the owner of a publication claims an injunction to restrain the issue of another publication with a similar name, he must show not only that the assumption of the name by deft. is calculated to deceive the public, but also that there is a probability of pltf. being injured by such deception.

Pltf. had long been the proprietor of a daily morning newspaper, called the Morning Post. Defts. commenced a daily evening newspaper called the Evening Post. There was no evidence of any actual injury having been done to pltf. by the conduct of defts.:—Held: although the conduct of defts. in taking the name Evening Post might be calculated to deceive the public into supposing that there was a connection between the two papers, there was no probability that pltf. would be injured by such supposition; & an injunction was therefore refused.—BORTHWICK v. EVENING POST (1888), 37 Ch. D. 449; 57 L. J. Ch. 406; 58 L. T. 252; 36 W. R. 434; 4 T. L. R. 234, C. A.

86. ———. — Held: pltf., who were the proprietors of an evening newspaper called the Evening Express, circulating in Liverpool, were not, in the circumstances, entitled to an injunction to restrain the circulation in Liverpool by deft. of a morning newspaper called the North Express, on the ground of similarity of name, the newspapers not being similar in appearance or contents, & not being competing papers, & deft. acting bond fide in adopting the name & without any fraudulent intention.—WILCOX v. PEARSON (1901), 18 T. L. R. 220.

87. ———. — There is in law no monopoly in the name of a newspaper. To entitle the proprietors of a newspaper to an injunction restraining the publication of another newspaper with a similar name, they must show that the use of that name is calculated to lead to the belief that defts.' newspaper is pltf.'; & the use of such name is injurious to them.—GEORGE OUTRAM & CO., LTD. v. LONDON EVENING NEWSPAPERS CO., LTD. (1911), 27 T. L. R. 231; 55 Sol. Jo. 255.

88. ———. — The right of the proprietor of a newspaper to prevent another person from adopting the same or similar name for a similar publication is not founded on the right of property in the proprietor, but rests upon the equitable doctrine that the user of such name is reasonably calculated to induce the public to believe that the new paper is that of the original proprietor, & to pass off his paper for that of the original proprietor.

The proprietor of an old established paper called The Mail, published three days a week at 11 a.m., at the price of 2d., in London, but whose principal circulation was in the provinces & abroad, was held not entitled, upon interlocutory application, to an injunction restraining deft. from using on a daily morning paper which he had just started, & which was published in London at 3 a.m., at the price of 1d., the title of The Morning Mail. —WALTER v. EMMOTT (1885), 54 L. J. Ch. 1059; 53 L. T. 437; 1 T. L. R. 632, C. A.

89. — — User of name by plaintiff for few days prior to defendants' publication. — LICENSED VICTUALLERS' NEWSPAPER CO. v. BINGHAM, No. 80, ante.

90. Use of common word. — Pltf. published in numbers, in a weekly periodical called Every Week, a tale entitled "Splendid Misery; or, East End & West End," by C. A. Hazlewood. Deft. subsequently commenced issuing in weekly parts, in a newspaper published by him, a tale by Miss Braddon entitled "Splendid Misery." Pltf. was registered as the proprietor of Every Week before the publication of it began. & after the tale had been completed he had himself registered as the proprietor of "Splendid Misery; or, East End & West End," giving the date of publication of the number of Every Week which contained the first number of the tale as the date of the publication of the tale. He then commenced an action to restrain deft. from continuing his publication of Miss Braddon's tale under the title of "Splendid Misery," & moved for an injunction. Before the motion was made deft. had altered the title of Miss Braddon's tale, & the motion was ordered to stand over till the trial, deft. undertaking not to alter the new title in the meantime. The tale was finished under the new title before the trial. It was proved that a novel which once had a large circulation had been published in 1801 under the title of "Splendid Misery," & that second-hand copies could still be met with. At the trial, the judge held that deft. had infringed pltf.'s copyright, & made an order containing no declaration of right, but simply ordering deft. to pay the whole costs of the action. Deft. appealed, contending that pltf. had no title, & the action ought to have been dismissed:—Held: pltf. had no copyright in the title "Splendid Misery," for that copyright can only exist in something original, & the mere adopting as a title hackneyed phrase, which moreover had been used as the title of a novel many years before, & which for anything that appeared might have been copied from that novel, could not give any copyright in that title.—DICKS v. YATES (1881), 18 Ch. D. 76; 50 L. J. Ch. 809; 44 L. T. 660, C. A.

92. — —.] — Pltfs., an American co., were the proprietors & publishers of a shilling monthly magazine called Everybody's Magazine, which was first issued in 1899. Subsequently defts. published a weekly penny paper called Everybody's Weekly. In an action by pltfs. to restrain defts. from selling any periodical with the title "Everybody's":—Held: the action failed as the two periodicals were not likely to compete with one another, & the ct. could not restrain the use of a common & popular expression like "Everybody's."—*RIDGWAY Co. v. 96. The London Journal — The Daily London Journal.] — In Oct. 1857, A., being the proprietor of a weekly publication called The London Journal, the price of which was 1d., assigned his copyright & interest therein to B. for value, & entered into a covenant with B. not to publish, either alone or in partnership with any other person, any weekly periodical of a nature similar to The London Journal. In May, 1859, A. issued an advertisement, announcing the publication by him on June 1, following of a daily newspaper to be called The Daily London Journal, & to be sold at 1d. B. thereupon filed his bill against A. for an injunction to restrain A. from publishing The Daily London Journal: & the judge made an order for an injunction. Upon appeal, the order for an injunction was confirmed upon B. undertaking to abide by any order the ct. might make as to damages, & to bring an action against A. within one week.—*INGRAM v. 97. Bell's Life in London — The Penny Bell's Life.] — (1) The registered proprietors of Bell's Life in London & Sporting Chronicle, published weekly, at the price of 5d., filed a bill against the proprietors & publishers of a new newspaper called The Penny Bell's Life & Sporting News, & which was published at the price of 1d. The evidence produced showed, that from the similarity of the two names mistakes had occurred, & were likely to occur, on the part of the public, & that inquiries had been made at the office of Bell's Life in London for The Penny Bell's Life. On motion on behalf of pltfs., the ct. granted an injunction to restrain defts. from the use of the words Bell's Life in the title of their newspaper.

(2) In order to establish a case for relief it is not necessary to show a "fraudulent purpose" in deft., but it is sufficient if the similarity of title be such as to have led, & to be likely to lead, to mistakes.—*CLEMENT v. SECT. 3.—ASSIGNMENT.

103. Whether interest assignable.] — If the printer & publisher of a newspaper assign his interest therein to a creditor as a security, but continue to print & publish as before, & no affidavit of the change of interest be delivered to the Comrs. of Stamps, & the printer become bkpt., the right to the paper will pass to his assignees, under the assignment of the comrs.—LONGMAN v. TRIPP (1805), 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 67; 127 E. R. 547.

104. — —.] — B. was the sole registered proprietor of certain newspapers published by him on premises of which he was the rated occupier, & he was the owner of the type & plant used in the publication. He mortgaged the newspapers type & plant to F., who took no steps to alter the registration of proprietorship. The sheriff entered under an execution issued by a creditor of B., & though possession was demanded by F., remained in possession till B. had become bkpt., which took place after two days:—Held: the right of publishing a newspaper is goods & chattels within the meaning of the enactment of the Bkpt. Law Consolidation Act as to reputed ownership; the type & plant were not within the order & disposition of the bkpt., at the time of his bkpcy., with the consent of the true owner, but the right of publication of the newspapers was not capable of seizure by the sheriff, & as the bkpt. continued the sole registered proprietor, & nothing had been done to make it apparent that he was not the sole owner, the doctrine of reputed ownership applied to the newspapers.—*Re BALDWIN, Ex p. —See, also, No. 76, ante.

105. Effect of assignment—Whole interest passes.]—Pltfs. had purchased the copyright of & the right to use the name of deft. in the publication of a work called Beeton's Christmas Annual, & deft. agreed to give his whole time to the service of pltfs. & not to engage in any other business:—Held: deft. must be restrained from advertising a rival work.

When you sell a newspaper it is not merely the right to sell one number of it but continuing to publish it from day to day it may be as long as the world lasts, under the name by which it has become known (MALINS, V.-C.).—WARD v. BEETON (1874), L. R. 19 Eq. 207; 23 W. R. 533.

106. Contract to assign share of interest—Specific performance.]—H. & S. were joint proprietors of newspapers, subject to a mtge. to M. S. became bkpt. in Feb. 1861. M., in Mar. 1861, sold H.'s moiety in the copyright, etc. to B., to be paid for by bills of exchange. M. continued to be mtgee. of that moiety, & he, on Mar. 5, 1861, entered into a formal agreement with B., whereby B. agreed to purchase from H. one-half share of the newspapers; & M., in May, 1861, entered into an arrangement with B. for the sale to him of S.'s share, in the newspapers at the same price as paid for the other moiety. Bills of exchange were given to M., at long dates, upon which interest at 6 per cent was to be charged. B. took formal possession of the property, managed it, & caused the name of D. to be entered at Somerset House as the printer; but H. & B. were entered in the books there as sole proprietors, subject to mtges. to M. On July 17, 1862, B. was required to render accounts of the profits to H., on the ground that they were partners, but he refused to do so, alleging that he was the sole proprietor, & he caused his name to be entered at Somerset House as such. On Oct. 2, 1862, H. filed a bill to dissolve the partnership, & for accounts; & on Oct. 30, 1862, B. filed a cross bill against M. & H. for specific performance:—Held: there must be a decree to that effect, with costs, & the bill of H. must be dismissed, with costs.—HUTTON v. BEETON & M'MURRAY, BEETON v. M'MURRAY & HUTTON (1863), 9 Jur. N. S. 1310.

SECT. 4.—MORTGAGE.

107. Property as subject of mortgage.]—Re BALDWIN, Ex p. Foss, No. 104, ante.

108. Mortgagor registered as sole proprietor—Effect on mortgagor becoming bankrupt.]—Re BALDWIN, Ex p. Foss, No. 104, ante.

109. Enforcement of mortgage—Printer as mortgagee in possession—Items in taking account.]—N. was in 1838 appointed the printer of The Railway Times newspaper, & in 1840 he became the mtgee. of two fourth parts of the newspaper, with a power of sale, which power he in 1841 exercised, & he sold the two fourth parts to his brother, & at the same time N. became the manager of the paper. In 1846 N. ceased to be the printer & manager, & in 1848 he obtained an assignment of the two fourth parts from his brother. In 1850 he became the purchaser of the other two fourth parts, & he was then registered as the owner of The Railway Times. In 1857 the Court decreed that the sale of 1841 was invalid, & the mtgor. was declared entitled to redeem. An account was directed of all sums received by N., or which but for his wilful neglect & default he might have received, in respect of the proceeds of the newspaper from the date of the sale of 1841: & in taking such account regard was to be had to any debt or debts, other than the said mtge. debt which should be found due from the mtgor. to N. In taking the account N. claimed to be allowed to charge credit prices, on the ground that although he was in receipt of cash payments from 1841 to 1846 yet that he was entitled to apply those payments, first in discharge of a debt due to him for printing, & then in payment of the expenses of the newspaper. On adjourned summons from chambers:—Held: (1) deft. was entitled to charge, not credit, but only cash prices in the account.

(2) A balance of £2,201 had been found due to N. in 1841 for printing up to that date. In 1847, N. entered into an agreement with one of the proprietors, to which the mtgor. was not a party, that he, N., would accept £400, "in satisfaction of all claims upon the proprietary." In taking the account with the mtgor., N. claimed to be allowed credit for this sum of £2,201, or for half of it, against the mtgor.: but the ct. disallowed the claim.—ROBERTSON v. NORRIS (1859), 1 Giff. 428; 1 L. T. 123; 5 Jur. N. S. 1238; 65 E. R. 986.

110. — Receiver & manager appointed.]—On motion by the mtgee. of a newspaper, a receiver & manager of the mtged. property were appointed until the hearing of the cause.—CHAPLIN v. YOUNG (1862), 6 L. T. 97, L. C.

111. Obligations of mortgagee after reconveyance—Not to compete with business.]—I do not think that any case has been made out which will justify me in granting an injunction. I do not refuse the injunction upon the ground that a mtgee. after reconveyance would not be under the same obligations as a vendor. It is not necessary to decide that point. The obligation which a vendor is under is that he may not, although he may set up a rival business, solicit the customers, of the old firm to leave the old firm, & to come to him. It depends upon the nature of the business whether the request to deal with him would be a request to leave the old business. Where the business is that of a newspaper proprietor it appears to me that a request by the vendor to a person to buy his newspaper is not a request to leave off buying the old newspaper. In the present case I do not find a breach of any obligation which K. would be under if he had sold the newspaper to plff. (CHANNELL, J.).—TAYLOR v. CAMBRIDGE GAZETTE CO., LTD. & KILNER (1898), 42 Sol. Jo. 832.

113. Liability of joint adventurers—For goods supplied.]—A. B. & C. verbally agreed that they should bring out & be jointly interested in a periodical publication. A. was to be the publisher, & to make & receive general payments, B. to be the editor, & C. the printer; & after payment of all expenses, they were to share the profits of the work equally. C. was to furnish the paper, & charge it to the account at cost prices. No profits were ever made, nor any accounts settled. Pltf. furnished paper to A. for the purpose of being used by him in printing the periodical.—Held: B. & C. were not jointly liable with A. for the price of it.—WILSON v. WHITEHEAD (1842), 10 M. & W. 503; 12 L. J. Ex. 43; 152 E. R. 569.

114. Materials obtained for publication—Supply to rival publication restrained.]—Canvassers who had been employed by the proprietor under agreements which bound them to devote themselves in a particular district exclusively to obtaining from traders advertisements to be inserted in the directory, & to supply the blocks & materials necessary for producing such advertisements, proposed at the expiration of their agreements to assist a rival publication in procuring similar advertisements.—Held: they were not entitled to use for the purposes of any other publication the materials which, while in pltf.'s employment they had obtained for the purpose of his publication.—LAMB v. EVANS, [1893] 1 Ch. 218; 62 L. J. Ch. 404; 68 L. T. 131; 41 W. R. 405; 1 T. L. R. 87; 2 R. 189, C. A.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

116. What is an advertisement—Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (c. 134), s. 9.]—In order that a print may be carried or distributed by way of advertisement within the above sect., the print itself must be an advertisement. Therefore where a print which is a publication of news, but is not in itself an advertisement, is, without the approval of the Comr. of Police, distributed in such a way as to obtain the same consequences as if it were an advertisement, the distributor thereof is not liable to the penalty imposed by the sect. for distributing a print by way of advertisement except in such form & manner as may be approved by the Comr. of Police.—GAGE v. BREALEY (1898), 67 L. J. Q. B. 457; 46 W. R. 415; 14 T. L. R. 324; 42 Sol. Jo. 380, D. C.

118. Payment for advertisements—By deduction from business introduced—Meaning of business introduced.]—Def't. agreed in writing to advertise for a year in pltf.'s newspaper on the terms that no cash was to be paid by him, & that the cost was to be deducted from business introduced by them during such year. An export order was sent to him through pltf's. by a co. of which they were two of the directors during the year, & after its expiration they themselves sent him an order for goods of less value than the price of the advertisements. He declined to execute the orders, & thereupon they brought an action for the price of the advertisements. They were nonsuited, & the Div. Ct. held that, as they had not introduced any business to him within the terms of the agreement by bringing about the relations of buyer & seller between him & a third party, their motion for a new trial must be dismissed.—Held: pltf's. had never put themselves into a position to bring the action.—NECK & BRANDRETH v. 137. — — — — —.]—By Royal letters patent under the Seal of Great Britain, granted in 1785, the patentees were appointed sole King's printers for Scotland, so far as such appointment might be consistent with the Act of Union & the laws of Great Britain, with, in particular, the sole privilege of printing in Scotland, in the English tongue, the Bible, the New Testament, Books of Psalms, Books of Common Prayer, Confessions of the Faith, & the larger & shorter Catechisms, & the sole privilege of printing in Scotland Acts of Parliament & other official documents: with an express prohibition under penalty of forfeiture of importation of any books or documents of the above descriptions from any "places beyond the seas" without the licence of the patentees.

Proceedings were taken in Scotland by the patentees to restrain the importation into & sale in Scotland of Bibles & Books of Common Prayer, etc., printed in England by the King's printers in England:—Held: the prerogative of the Crown in England & Scotland to grant the exclusive right to print the Bible rested on the duty imposed upon the Sovereign as chief executive magistrate to superintend the publication of the works upon which the established doctrines of our religion are founded, so that these works may be published in a correct & authentic form; this duty & the corresponding prerogative are the same in Scotland as in England.—*MANNERS v. ### SECT. 1.—THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

See, generally, Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21), s. 5; & Prison Act, 1898 (c. 41).

1. Liability in trespass—Illegal exercise of powers of classification—Removal of prisoner.]—

(1) The removal of a person from one part of a prison to another in which he is not legally confined is a trespass.

(2) The Secretary of State is liable in trespass if a person be so removed under a general order made by him for the classification of prisoners which he had no legal authority to make.

(3) Trespass will lie against the governor of a prison for causing prisoner to be removed by force or threats of force from one division of the prison to another, in which he ought not by law to be confined, although he acts in obedience to a rule issued by the Secretary of State, if such rule be not in accordance with statutes as to the classification of prisoners.—COBBETT v. GREY (1850), 4 Exch. 729; 19 L. J. Ex. 137; 14 L. T. O. S. 182; 154 E. R. 1409.

2. Liability for assault—Forcible feeding of prisoner.]—On a motion for a rule nisi for a mandamus to a magistrate to issue summonses against the Home Secretary & the governor & the medical officer of a gaol for an assault alleged to have been committed by the medical officer on one of prisoners who had refused to eat, & who had consequently been fed by force :—Held : the fact that the prisons are vested in the Home Secretary by Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21), s. 5, did not render him liable to be summoned in respect of the alleged assault.—R. v. MORTON BROWN, Ex p. AINSWORTH (1909), 74 J. P. 53, D. C.

Power to prohibit visit of justices.]—See No. 5. post.

3. Land procured for prison purposes—

Vested in Prison Commissioners.]—In 1807 the justices of the county of M. bought land covered with houses subject to leases for long terms, several years of which remained unexpired. The land & the houses were conveyed to the clerk of the peace for the county, “upon trust for justices of the county of M., for the purposes of Prison Act, 1865 (c. 126), & upon or for no other trust, intent or purpose whatsoever.” The land & houses were never used as part of the prison. An action having been brought to try whether the reversion in the land & houses was in the Prison Comrs. or the justices, deft. proposed to adduce as evidence the minutes of the proceedings of the justices in order to show that the land had been bought for the purpose of rendering the prison more commodious or safe :—Held : the reversion in the land & the houses standing thereon had passed to the Prison Comrs. by virtue of Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21).—PRISON COMRS. v. MIDDLESEX CLERK OF THE PEACE (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 506; 51 L. J. Q. B. 433; 46 L. T. 861; 46 J. P. 740; sub nom. PRISON COMRS. v. NICHOLSON, 30 W. R. 881, C. A.

7. —Detention on invalid warrant—Sentence altered on appeal—Fresh warrant necessary.]—Pltf. was convicted by a ct. of summary jurisdiction & sentenced to a term of imprisonment with hard labour. He was taken to prison under a warrant of commitment made out by the magistrate, but released pending an appeal to quarter sessions. The conviction was affirmed, but the sentence was altered. No fresh warrant of commitment was made out by the recorder at quarter sessions, but the original conviction by the magistrate was altered by the recorder in accordance with his sentence. Pltf. was then taken to prison, & the only documents handed to the governor of the prison were a copy of the original conviction by the magistrate as altered by the recorder & the original warrant of commitment by the magistrate. He was detained in prison for some days, when the conviction was quashed upon other grounds, & he was released. In an action for false imprisonment against the clerk of the peace of the borough & the governor of the prison for unlawfully imprisoning pltf.:—Held: the action could not be maintained against the clerk of the peace, as he was merely a ministerial officer & his act was a ministerial act; but the action was maintainable against the governor, as he was not justified in receiving pltf. into custody & detaining him without a fresh warrant of commitment by the recorder, & the documents which the governor received were not equivalent to such warrant of commitment, & the governor was liable in damages to pltf.—DEMERY v. COOK (1903), 88 L. T. 629; 67 J. P. 208; 19 T. L. R. 327; 47 Sol. Jo. 368; 20 Cox, C. C. 444.

Those are not liable at all who merely attend in obedience to the order of the superior, & witness the execution of his order by other officers. Where, in obedience to such orders, one set of defts. assault pltf. & force him downstairs into a cub, & another set accompany the cub with pltf. to a certain place & back again, both sets of officers are not liable as for one entire trespass, but pltf. must proceed against one or other.—*HERRING v. F. afterwards petitioned the Ct. of Bkpcy. for his discharge, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, & Execution Act, 1844 (c. 96), & having obtained from the comr. an order for his discharge, was, in obedience thereto, discharged by the keeper of the Queen's prison accordingly. Pltf. having brought an action against the keeper for an escape:—Held: whether this was or was not a debt from which the comr. had power to discharge prisoner, deft. was protected, being bound to obey the order of the comr., who was acting judicially in a matter over which he had jurisdiction.—

23. "Committal to prison"—Meaning of.—An offender having been summarily convicted by a Metropolitan police magistrate, was conveyed to prison under a warrant by pltf., a police constable. Pltf. thereby incurred certain expenses which prisoner was unable to defray. An order having been made by the magistrate, directed to deft. under 27 Geo. 2, c. 3, to pay to pltf. the amount of such expenses, deft. refused to pay, on the ground that the liability for the expenses of conveying prisoners to prison had been transferred to the Secretary of State by Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21), s. 4. The same question was raised as to the expense of conveying from the police ct. to the prison a man committed to take his trial for felony:—Held: (1) these expenses were payable by the Secretary of State & not by the county treasurer; (2) the words "committed to prison" in Prison Act, 1877 (c. 21), s. 57, refer to the act of the committing magistrate & not to the reception of prisoner in the gaol.—MULLINS v. execution, issued or to be issued":—Held: where an actual imprisonment within the walls of a prison, follows upon an arrest for debt, as one continuous act, within the usual time allowed & required by law, then the arrest must be taken to be the commencement of the imprisonment; but where after the arrest is made, any delay, not sanctioned by law, takes place before the actual commitment to prison, such as by the favour of pltf., or the negligent or permissive escape of prisoner; then, not the arrest, but the actual coming within the walls of a prison, is the commencement of such imprisonment.—YAPP v. HARRINGTON (1837), 3 Bing. N. C. 907; 3 Hodg. 165; 5 Scott, 105; 6 L. J. C. P. 351; 132 E. R. 680.

25. Maintenance of prisoners in county gaol—Liability of borough council.—The city of S. in the county of W. had, by charter of James I., a gaol, & quarter sessions. By a local Act, the city was required to pull down & rebuild their gaol, & till it was rebuilt, the city prisoners were to be committed to the gaol of the county of W., the city paying for their maintenance as the justices of W. might direct. By a subsequent local Act, reciting the former Act, that it was not expedient to rebuild the city gaol, that permission had been asked & obtained from the county justices to continue to commit to the county gaol, & that R. had proposed, by way of compensation, to grant to the justices a piece of land for an addition to the gaol, the clauses of the local Act requiring the city to build a gaol, were repealed; the piece of land was vested in the High Sheriff of W. for the time being; & the prisoners were in future to be committed to the county gaol. No express provisions were made as to their maintenance. By the Municipal Corporations Act the bounds of the city of S. were enlarged:—Held: the local Acts did not amount to a special contract between the county & city as to the maintenance, etc. of prisoners within Prisons Act, 1842 (c. 98), s. 18. Semble: if it had amounted to such a contract between the county & the ancient city, it would not have been one relating to prisoners committed from the enlarged city.—*R. v. The county treasurer is also liable to pay, out of the county rate, like expenses incurred by a Metropolitan police constable under warrants of committal made by Metropolitan police magistrates, sitting at police cts., & directed & delivered to such Metropolitan police constable, the orders for payment on deft. being also made by Metropolitan police magistrates, sitting at the police cts., whether such committals are for trial or charges of felony or misdemeanour, or upon remand, or on summary convictions, or for refusing to enter into recognisances to keep the peace. But the county treasurer is not liable to pay a police constable the expenses of reconveying to a police ct. from the county gaol prisoner who had been previously committed there for re-examination, when the warrant to bring prisoner up again was made, not on the police constable, but upon the gaoler, who had employed the police constable to reconvey prisoner.

34. Permission to reside outside gaol.—Under supervision.—No presumption of discharge.]—Deft. to an action in which the East India Co. were pltf's., having had a verdict given against him & judgment signed for damages & costs, was imprisoned in the gaol at Bombay under a writ of ca. sa. The medical officer in attendance having reported that a temporary release from confinement was necessary for his health, the Govt. at Bombay gave orders to the sheriff & the superintendent of police that he should be permitted temporarily to reside outside the gaol, under such surveillance as might prove as little irksome as possible to prisoner while consistent with its perfect efficiency. On being informed of the proposal deft. gave a written reply. "I shall be grateful for any change, & the consideration for my health is indeed most welcome." He was removed to a residence outside the gaol, under the charge of the sheriff's peons, & after remaining under their charge for some months, he was remitted to the gaol. An application was made to the Supreme Ct. at Bombay that he should be discharged from custody, & was refused:—Held: the removal of deft. to a residence outside the gaol did not, under the circumstances, operate as a discharge, the custody continued; & deft., having assented to such removal, was estopped from alleging that he did not continue in the custody of the sheriff.—*HAINES v. 38. Right of gaoler to recapture — Without warrant.]—Prisoner in custody, under a sentence of imprisonment for two years, on a conviction for a misdemeanour, was discharged out of custody, on bringing a writ of error & entering into recognisances to prosecute the writ with effect. No notice was given to prosecutors, nor were the recognisances duly filed in the Crown Office. He was therefore ordered to be recommitted. The judge's warrant under which he was retaken, directed his apprehension & re-committal, stating it to be "in

Part I.—Definitions.

1. Prize distinguished from booty.—I am therefore led to the consideration of the meaning of the word "prize," as here applied. It evidently means maritime capture effected by maritime force only—ships & cargoes taken by ships. It is perfectly well known, that a land force has no interest in prize property so called ; what a land force takes by itself is not prize, but booty. What is taken by a conjunct expedition was formerly erroneously considered as vested, in a certain proportion of it, in the capturing ships under those prize acts ; but in a great & important case lately decided. [The Hoogskarpel, No. 410, post], it was determined that the whole was entirely out of the effect of these prize acts ; & in so deciding, determined by direct & included consequence, that the words "prizes taken by any of His Majesty's ships or vessels of war," cannot apply to any other cases than those in which capture was made by ships only : & that if a land force is employed in it, the law does not recognise its title. That decision clearly included in itself an interpretation of those words wherever they occur in any Act of Parliament touching such matters (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—Re GENOA & ITS DEPENDENCIES, SPEZZIA, SAVONA, ETC. (1820), 2 Dods. 444 ; 165 E. R. 1541.

6. —.—.—The rule of the Prize Ct. that property in goods is considered to be in the shipper until delivery, & that a sale in transitu is invalid, does not apply unless war is imminent & expected on the part of the vendor, & the sale is made to defeat the rights of belligerent captors. Between July 20 & 30, 1914, German merchants sold to Dutch merchants various parcels of cargo in transitu, shipped on board a British steamship & consigned to a German port "to order." The Dutch merchants duly paid for the goods, which they re-sold to customers of their own. On Aug. 4, 1914, war broke out between Great Britain & Germany, & when the ship called at a British port the cargo was seized as prize & afterwards sold:—Held: on the evidence, war with Great Britain was not regarded as imminent, in its proper meaning of "threatening or about to occur," by the German vendors when they sold the goods; consequently the sales were valid, & the goods were not confiscable as prize; & the proceeds of sale must be released.—THE SOUTH-FIELD (1915), [1917] A. ## Part II.—Rights in Prize.

SECT. 1.—PREROGATIVE RIGHTS OF CROWN.

8. Rights primâ facie in Crown.]—A belligerent nation which is in the exercise of these rights of war, is bound to find tribunals for the regulation of them, tribunals clear in their authority, as well as pure in their administration; & if from causes of private internal policy, arising out of the peculiar relation of the component parts of the belligerent state, difficulties arise, the neutral is not to be prejudiced on that account; he has a right to speedy & unobstructed justice. . . .

This ct. [Admlty.] has never thought it a breach of that equal justice which it owes to all its suitors, to suffer a cause to be interposed, that, from its magnitude of interests or other circumstances of just weight had a peculiar claim to a pre-audience. . . . If an order [from the govt. for the release of a ship & cargo] had been sent to this ct. it certainly would have met with an instant obedience; because the Crown having the only beneficial interest in droits here, the seisor having nothing but a mere expectation of bounty, & the Crown having an undoubted right to exempt from the operations of war, any individual subject of the enemy himself, this ct. would, in pursuance of such an order release the property, although it directly appeared to be an enemy's property (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MADONNA DEL BURSO (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 169; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 370; 165 E. R. 574.

9. —.]—Capture by a cutter, fitted out by the captain of a man of war, as a tender, & manned from his ship, but without a commission, or authority from the Admlty., will not enure to the benefit of the King's ship.

It is an elementary principle of prize law that all prizes belong to the state, in monarchies to the sovereign. By modern policy this interest has been granted out to persons of certain descriptions, acting under the authority of public commissions (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MELOMANE (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 41; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 419; 165 E. R. 690.

Annotations:—Consd. The Donna Barbara (1831), 2 Hag. Adm. 366. Reid. The Charlotte (1813), 1 Dods. 212; The Zepherina (1830), 2 Hag. Adm. 317; The Anchab, etc., [1921] P. 218. Mentd. R. v. Serva (1845), 1 Den. 104.

10. —.]—The power of Crown to direct the release of property seized as prize, before adjudication & against the will of the captors, is not taken away by any grant of prize conferred in the Order of Council, the Proclamation, or the Prize Act.

The rights of the Crown are public rights, conferred not merely for private purposes or for personal splendour, but for the public service, & to answer the great exigencies of public interest, & claims of public justice; as such, they demand the active protection of every ct., in which the occurrence of them is suggested to arise. The right which is asserted by the claimant, & is denied on the part of the captor, is that of releasing ships & goods that had been taken jure belli, before adjudication, & without the consent of the captors. . . . That the Crown has exercised the power in this instance, is . . . sufficiently proved, by the solemn evidence of an official letter from the Secretary of State for the foreign department, to the minister of that country whose subjects were principally interested in the question, informing him that the ships were released, & that orders were given by the Lords of the Admlty. for that purpose. . . . Prize is altogether a creature of the Crown. No man has, or can have, any interest but what he takes as the mere gift of the Crown. . . . The acquisitions of war belong to the Crown (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ELSEBE (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 173; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 441; 165 E. R. 738.

Annotations:—Consd. Alexander v. Wellington (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 35; The Derfflinger, The Förde, The Leda, Re American Meat Packers' Agreement, Re Certain Swedish Copper, [1919] P. 264. Reid. The Parlement Belge (1879), 4 P. D. 129.

11. —.]—Formerly there was a Lord High Admiral, who now exists only in contemplation of law. All rights of prize belong originally to the Crown, & the beneficial interest derived to others can proceed only from the grant of the Crown. . . . It appears . . . from the tenor of this order, [Order of Council, 1665], that the distinction between the Admiral & the rights of the Crown is founded in this, that when vessels come in not under any motive arising out of the occasions of war, but from distress or weather, or want of provisions, or from ignorance of war, & are seized in port, they belong to the Lord High Admiral; but where the hand of violence has been exercised upon them, where the impression arises from acts connected with war, from revolt of their own crew, or from being forced or driven in by the King's ships, they belong to the Crown. . . . The rights of the Lord High Admiral, though they are to be duly supported, are not to be extended by construction; & for these reasons, that the grants of the Crown differ, in this respect, from other grants, that they are to be taken strictly, & are not to be interpreted to the benefit of the grantee; & secondly, that the rights of the Crown, being public rights, deposited there for great public purposes, are not to be alienated beyond the precise tenor of the grant. . . . The grant to the Lord High Admiral, whatever it conveys, carries with it a total & perpetual alienation of the rights of the Crown. They are gone for ever, & separated from the Crown, & nothing short of an Act of Parliament can restore them; whereas the grant to captors is nothing more than a mere temporary transfer of the beneficial interest; the Crown would not be chargeable with a violation of any public law, if it did not issue the grant. . . . With respect to captures in roads, generally, to raise a question of this kind, a road must at least be so connected with the common uses of the port as to constitute a part of the port in which the capture is alleged to have been made. . . . There are roads along many parts of the coasts of this kingdom, which make no part of any port. The port of Yarmouth is very different from the roads of Yarmouth; . . . a ship, lying merely at anchor in a road, without being protected by points of lands, has been held to support a claim of this nature on the part of the Admiralty. It is not enough that ships should anchor there for a short stay. It must . . . be the place where vessels not only arrive, but take up their station for the purpose of unloading their cargoes, in the ordinary course of commerce (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARIA FRANCOISE (1806), 6 Ch. During his continuance in the transport service the ship makes a capture, which is condemned; & upon petition to the Treasury, two-thirds of a moiety of the proceeds arising from the capture ordered by warrant from the Crown to be paid to the owners. These proceeds are entirely in the discretion of the Crown; & upon motion for payment into ct. of a sum admitted by the Comrs. of Transports to be due for freight under the charterparty, which motion was resisted, on the ground that the comrs. were entitled to set off the amount of the proceeds received by the owners under the warrant; payment was ordered accordingly, without prejudice to the question of ownership.

The proceeds of the capture are the undoubted property of the Crown, & as such disposable by the Crown entirely at its own discretion (LORD ELDON, C.).—THURGAR v. MORLEY (1817), 3 Mer. 20; 36 E. R. 8.

31. Enemy goods captured at sea.]—During the Russian war one of Her Majesty's ships of war, on her passage to O., fell in with & took possession of a raft of timber, having the Russian imperial mark painted on the several spars composing the same:—Held: such timber must be condemned as a droit of the Crown, & not a droit of Admiralty.—RAFT OF RUSSIAN TIMBER (1859), 5 Jur. N. S. 1109.

32. Enemy ship captured at sea.]—By Proclamation under Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), His Majesty declared his intention of granting prize money to his Naval & Marine Forces out of the proceeds of such prizes captured during the war as the Tribunal appointed under the Act should declare to be droits of the Crown:—Held: (1) the proceeds of condemned cargoes ex neutral vessels which were either intercepted at sea by His Majesty's ships & sent into British ports (The Hillerod), or which called at British ports under arrangement between their owners & His Majesty's Govt. in order to avoid seizure at sea (The Florida), are droits of the Crown; (2) the proceeds of condemned cargoes brought to this country in vessels bound to British ports in the ordinary course of their voyage (The Abonema), or diverted voluntarily by their owners (The Soldier Prince) or which called in order to bunker (The Albania), are droits of Admiralty, & are not payable into the Naval Prize Fund; (3) there is no distinction in principle between the case of goods seized from a ship when she comes into port & the case of goods or their proceeds returned to this country for prize proceedings by the shipowner under arrangement with the Govt., whereby, to avoid delay, the ship is allowed to proceed to her destination on an undertaking to return the goods on demand. If the goods would have been regarded as droits of the Crown, had they been taken out of the ship originally, the returned goods or their proceeds are regarded as droits of the Crown (The Oscar II.). Similarly with regard to droits of Admiralty. (The Garonne); (4) the British share of the proceeds of enemy vessels seized by a joint force of French & British vessels, & condemned in a French Prize Ct., constitute a droit of the Crown (The Tinos); (5) an enemy vessel seized at sea by one of His Majesty's ships constitutes a droit of the Crown (The Adjutant); but an enemy vessel, seized, outside a British port by the Collector of Customs being a seizure by a non-commissioned captor, constitutes a droit of Admiralty. (The Belgia).—THE ABONEMA, THE HILLEROD, THE FLORIDA, THE ALBANIA, THE ADJUDANT, [1919] P. 41; 88 L. J. P. 113; 120 L. T. 252; 35 T. L. R. 203; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 409.

33. —.]—(1) A number of German & Austrian vessels, which were either in Egyptian ports at the outbreak of war or came in shortly afterwards, declined to leave port & remained there until, under compulsion of the Egyptian authorities, British crews were received on board to navigate them outside territorial waters where they were formally captured by British commissioned ships of war. All the vessels were subsequently brought before His Britannic Majesty's Prize Ct. for Egypt, & on appeal, to the Privy Council, & were condemned as prize:—Held: the captures must be treated as having been made at sea, & not when possession was taken of the vessels while still in Egyptian ports, & accordingly, the proceeds were droits of the Crown & not droits of Admiralty, & passed into the Naval Prize Fund (The Derfflinger).

(2) The proceeds of condemned cargoes ex neutral vessels which came into the Downs for examination, owing to the system of patrols established whereby vessels passing through the Straits of Dover were compelled to go into the Downs, are droits of the Crown (The Forde).

(3) A German vessel, captured at sea by one of His Majesty's ships, & condemned as prize, was afterwards released by the Crown as an act of grace, as it appeared that, although nominally owned by a German co., the real owners of the vessel were an American co.:—Held: it was immaterial that the release took place before the passing of Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), under which it was clear that such a prize, being a droit of the Crown, enured for the benefit of the fleet, & the value of the vessel, with interest at 5 per cent., should be paid by the Exchequer into the Naval Prize Fund (The Leda).

(4) Large quantities of meat consigned by the big American meat packers of Chicago, ostensibly to neutral consignees, were seized as prize. For reasons of State the Crown came to an agreement with the packers whereby a formal decree of condemnation by the Prize Ct. was made, subject to the terms that 75 per cent. of the condemned proceeds should be paid out to the packers:—Held: the Exchequer was not bound to bring the value of the released 75 per cent. into the Prize Ct. for adjudication by the tribunal.

(5) Parcels of copper, consigned to Swedish ports & seized as prize, were not brought before the Prize Ct. for adjudication, but a certain sum was paid to the Swedish claimants & part of the copper was taken over by the War Office & the Ministry of Munitions & part was sold, a profit of £18,741 being made on the transaction. By Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), sched. I., para. 5, there shall be paid into the Naval Prize Fund "any other sums received in respect of ships & goods subject to prize jurisdiction, which the tribunal consider may reasonably be treated . . . as being sums to which, had there been a grant of prize to captors, captors would have been entitled":—Held: the Exchequer was not liable to pay the profit realised over the transaction into the Naval Prize Fund.—THE DERFFLINGER, THE FORDE, THE LEDA, Re AMERICAN MEAT PACKERS' AGREEMENT, Re CERTAIN SWEDISH COPPER, [1919] P. 264; 89 L. 41. Operation of grant to Lord High Admiral—Total & perpetual alienation of rights of Crown.]—THE MARIA FRANCOISE, No. 11, ante.

42. Grant construed strictly.]—Dutch ships detained in port at the Cape of Good Hope, before declaration of hostilities against Holland, claimed as droits of Admty. condemned to the Crown, jure coronæ.

The question arises on certain Dutch ships, which were found at the Cape of Good Hope, by [a] squadron, & which have been proceeded against as prize, on the part of His Majesty, jure coronæ. An intervention has been now given, on the part of the Admty., claiming them as droits & perquisites of Admty.; . . . such an intervention may be rightly given; because as long as the office of Lord High Admiral, though now residing in the person of His Majesty, continues in this kingdom to have a legal existence, it is extremely proper, that the droits & perquisites of the office should continue as anciently distinguished. . . . The rights of the Lord High Admiral are to be considered as rights stricti juris, as rights originally granted in derogation of those higher rights of the Crown, which are vested in the Crown for general utility: such grants are to be construed strictly on the known presumption that the Crown has not parted with any right which the public wisdom has conferred upon it, further than the express words of the grant import.

The grant alluded to is to be found recognised in the Order in Council of Charles II. That order, among other things, directs "that all ships & goods belonging to enemies coming into any port, creek, or road of this His Majesty's Kingdom of England, or of Ireland, by stress of weather or other accident, or mistake of port, or by ignorance, not knowing of the war, do belong to the Lord High Admiral"; but certainly not in foreign ports. It is the first time that I have heard the idea started that it was to extend beyond the dominions of the Crown, to ports belonging to foreign powers. . . . It has always been understood that such a coming in must be during the subsisting war . . . & all other seizures made anywhere else, or under any other circumstances, before a war, do belong to His Majesty (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE GERTRUYDA (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 211; 165 E. R. 292.

43. —.]—(1) A capture made by the crews of the King's ship stationed at the island of St. Marcou, adjudged to be not a droit of Admty., but prize to the actual captor.

(2) All grants of the Crown are to be strictly construed against the grantee, contrary to the usual policy of the law in the consideration of grants; & upon this just ground, that the prerogatives & rights & emoluments of the Crown being conferred upon it for great purposes, & for the public use, it shall not be intended that such prerogatives, rights, & emoluments, are diminished by any grant, beyond what such grant, by necessary & unavoidable construction shall take away.

(3) The grant to the Lord High Admiral . . . gives him the benefit of all captures by whomsoever made, whether commissioned or non-commissioned persons . . . "of all ships & goods coming into ports, creeks, or roads of England or Ireland, unless they come in voluntarily upon revolt, or are driven in by the King's cruisers."

(4) Every anchorage ground is not a roadstead—a roadstead is a known general station for ships, statio tutissima nautis, notoriously used as such, & distinguished by the name, & not every spot where an anchor will find bottom & fix itself. The . . . expression of "coming into a road" shows, that by road is meant something much beyond mere anchorage ground on an open coast.

(5) A capture at sea made by a force upon the land, . . . is considered generally as a non-commissioned capture, & enures to the benefit of the Lord High Admiral. . . . All title to sea prize must be derived from commissions under the Admty., which is the great fountain of maritime authority; & a military force upon the land is not invested with any commission so derived, impressing upon them a maritime character, & authorising them to take upon that element for their own benefit (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE REBECKAH (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 227; 165 E. R. 158.

63. — Joint capture with naval force.—In the course of the combined naval & military operations in German East Africa a German steamship was captured in the harbour of Dar-es-Salaam under circumstances which, although they constituted a joint enterprise, in the opinion of the majority of the tribunal, did not constitute a joint capture but a capture by the naval forces alone, & that accordingly the claim put forward on behalf of the military forces to share as joint captors was not established:—Held: if the claim of the military forces to share as joint captors had been established, the proceeds of sale of the captured ship would be partly a droit of Admty. & partly a droit of the Crown; the portion allocated to the military forces would be a droit of Admty. & therefore, payable to the Exchequer to be dealt with by the Crown as it might be advised; & the portion allocated to the naval forces would be a droit of the Crown & payable to the Naval Prize Fund in accordance with the provisions of Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30).—THE FELDMARSHALL, [1920] P. 289; 89 L. The claim for the King's ship is given, in virtue of a seizure said to be made by this vessel, as a tender; & in order to support that averment it must be shown, either that there has been some express designation of her in that character by the orders of the Admty., or that there has been a constant employment & occupation, in a manner peculiar to tenders, equivalent to an express designation, & sufficient to impress that character upon her. . . . There is no sufficient foundation to induce the ct. to consider her in the capacity of a tender. She is not so recognised in terms by any authority proceeding from the Admty.; neither is the nature of the service imposed upon her such, as to induce a supposition that she must have been so considered by the Admty. As the master was not on board, the legal interest in the capture will not enure to the private captors under their commission, but it must be condemned as a droit of Admty. taken by non-commissioned captors (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CHARLOTTE (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 280; 165 E. R. 776.

Annotation:—Consd. The Carl (1855), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 261.

66. Customs officer.—(1) It is perfectly legal for any of Her Majesty's subjects, whether commissioned or not, to seize an enemy's ship; but it does not become the prize of the seizer.

A vessel built in Hanover in 1853, sailed in ballast to Riga, with a crew of Hanoverians. She then sailed, under Russian colours, to Havre, thence to Newcastle, thence to Lisbon. There she took in a cargo, & sailed for London on Apr. 4, under Hanoverian colours. Shortly after her arrival in the London Docks she was seized by a Custom House officer. She was claimed on the ground, that while lying at Newcastle she had been, under a power of attorney given by the owner to the master, sold & transferred to an Hanoverian.

With regard to an enemy's property coming to any part of the kingdom, or being found there . . . it is competent for any person to take possession of such property, unless it had any protection by licence, or some declaration emanating by the authority of the Crown, & to assist the Crown to proceed against it for adjudication. There are many instances in which a capture has been made in port by non-commissioned captors . . . & condemnation has passed to Her Majesty in her office of Admty. (DR. LUSHINGTON).

(2) Such a sale [sale of enemy ship to neutral] . . . is undoubtedly questionable, because . . . there is a mode of carrying on trade without being the actual owner of the vessel, namely, by transferring her to a pretended purchaser. . . . When a transaction of this kind is done under pressure, there always exists a certain degree of suspicion that it is not bona fide. With regard to the legality of the sale, assuming it to be bona fide, it is not denied that it is competent to neutrals to purchase the property of enemies to another country, whether consisting of ships or anything else; they have a perfect right to do so, & no belligerent can override it (per CUR.).

(3) "Spoliation of papers" has not been accurately defined; the destruction of papers varies with the circumstances under which they are destroyed; amounting sometimes to what is technically called "spoliation," sometimes not.

If at any time during a long voyage the master destroyed papers that had no relevancy to it, relating to a former voyage, the matter would not be put in issue. To say that was a spoliation of papers, would be going the length of saying that nothing in the nature even of a private letter was to be destroyed after the vessel had left her port (per CUR.).

In considering the question of spoliation of papers, the time when they were destroyed is of the greatest importance.

If papers are destroyed when the capturing vessel is in sight, or there is a chance of capture, it is the strongest proof that these papers contain some matter which would inure to condemnation; so it is if they are destroyed at the time of capture, & if they are destroyed clandestinely after capture; but if the papers are destroyed a long time antecedently, before there is any probability that they were destroyed for fraudulent purposes, & there is no evidence that it was for fraudulent purposes, then, though there is spoliation, & though, no doubt, the inference of law is against the act during war, yet the case is of a less stringent nature (per CUR.).—THE JOHANNA EMILIE (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 317; Spinks, 12; 23 L. 70. Factors determining status—Of trader—Place of carrying on trade.]—If a man goes into a belligerent country, & remains there four years, employing himself & his property in French [enemy] trade, it will not be easy to take him out of the description of a merchant of that country, as to his property so employed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TWO BROTHERS (1799), 1 Ch. 71. —.]—(1) The national character of a trader is to be decided, for the purposes of the trade, by the national character of the place in which it is carried on. If a war breaks out, a foreign merchant carrying on trade in a belligerent country, has a reasonable time allowed him for transferring himself & his property to another country. If he does not avail himself of the opportunity, he is to be treated, for the purposes of trade, as a subject of the power under whose dominion he carries it on, & as an enemy of those with whom that power is at war.

(2) A temporary occupation of a territory by an enemy's force, does not of itself necessarily convert the territory so occupied into hostile territory, or its inhabitants into enemies.

A ship under Wallachian colours, with a cargo of corn belonging to owners residing at Galatz in Moldavia, was seized for breach of the Black Sea blockade, when coming out of the Sulina mouth of the Danube, then in a state of blockade. At the time of the shipment of the cargo the Russians held possession of Moldavia & Wallachia, but such holding was with the expressed intention of not changing the national character, or incorporating that country with Russia :—Held : the national character of the owner was not changed by the fact of the Russians so occupying the Principalities, & restitution decreed, with costs & damages.

(3) The purpose of the blockade was declared to be for preventing the import of provisions to the enemy in possession of a neutral's country. Semble : the fact of a neutral ship bringing out a cargo of corn is not a breach of such blockade.

(4) It is the duty of the captor, as soon as possible, to send a prize to some convenient port in Her Majesty's dominions for adjudication, & to procure the examination in preparatory of the principal officers of the captured vessel, & to deposit in the Admiralty Ct. all papers found on board the prize.

(5) By the rules of law, a ship which has entered a blockaded port before the blockade, is entitled to come out again; & if she has a cargo taken on board before notice of the blockade, she is entitled to bring it out. The blockade of a port is prima facie notice of the existence of the blockade to all who are within it, because the inhabitants who see the blockading ships off their coast cannot be well ignorant of the blockade (per CUR.).—CREMIDI v. A person born in Holland, & living there till the time of the commencement of this adventure . . . removes to Copenhagen, & goes through the slight formalities of obtaining a burgher's brief. . . . He embarks immediately on an adventure to a Dutch settlement, under an intention, it is said, of returning to Europe; but is at the time of this capture left residing at Batavia. . . . To say that his Dutch character is purged off, by having made one voyage in a Danish ship, & under such circumstances, accompanied with an actual employment in a Dutch settlement, & with an intention of perpetuating his connection with Holland, by returning to end his days there, would be truly ridiculous. A voyage to a Dutch settlement from Copenhagen . . . but with a cargo procured in Holland. I do not say, that a neutral merchant may not very lawfully carry on such a traffic; purchasing articles in Holland, & afterwards employing them as he pleases, when they have become bond fide his property, & have been imported into his own country. But certainly it is not too much . . . to observe, that the sending a cargo so purchased, to a Dutch colony, does necessarily afford a strong ground of suspicion, that there are Dutch interests connected with it. . . . Where there has been a suppression of an enemy's interest with a fraudulent view, the party engaged in that fraud shall not be permitted to supply the defects of proof, of his own property mixed up with it (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE GRAAFF BERNSTORF (1800), 3 Ch. ## SUB-SECT. 1.—FLAG OR PASS.

87. General rule—Ship takes character of flag or pass.]—(1) An enemy's vessel ostensibly transferred with false papers & continuing in the enemy's trade, is liable to condemnation.

In my apprehension, unless it could be maintained as a rule, without any exception whatever, that the domicile of the proprietor constitutes the national character of the vessel, this ship must be condemned. . . . Where there is nothing particular or special in the conduct of the vessel itself, the national character is determined by the residence of the owners; but there may be circumstances arising from that conduct, which will lead to a contrary conclusion. It is a known & established rule with respect to a vessel, that if she is navigating under the pass of a foreign country, she is considered as bearing the national character of that nation under whose pass she sails; she makes a part of its navigation, & is in every respect liable to be considered as a vessel of that country. In like manner, & upon similar principles, if a vessel purchased in the enemy's country is, by constant & habitual occupation, continually employed in the trade of that country, commencing with the war, continuing during the war, & evidently on account of the war, on what ground is it to be asserted that vessel is not to be deemed a ship of the country from which she is so navigating? (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) Between . . . the depositions & the documents, there is a repugnance; & it is argued, that therefore the conviction of the ct. must be kept in equilibrium till it can receive farther proof: I admit this is a general rule of the ct. of Admty., but it is a rule by no means inflexible; it is liable to many exceptions; the exceptions may sometimes be in favour of depositions & sometimes, though more rarely, on the side of the documentary evidence. . . . Suppose there is a war, or the apprehension of a war, when the documents are composed . . . they become subject to some suspicions in limine: which suspicion may be increased by their having passed through the enemy's hands. The suspicions will be still further increased, if the property to which they relate has continued under the management & direction of the enemy. If, in addition to all this, they carry such contradictions or difficulties on the face of them as cannot be explained, admitting the matter to be a fair transaction, all or any of these circumstances must divest the papers of their natural credit . . . They are papers composed during a war, on the very spur of the occasion; & they purport that a ship belonging to the enemy was at that time transferred; but the management of her concerns still continued in the hands of the former owner; she sailed from a Dutch port, where she had been confined for want of employment, with an intention of returning to that . . . port only; the Dutch master continued in command, & the crew were picked up in the harbour of the enemy (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VIGILANTIA (1798), 1 Ch. 89. ———.]—Contract of certain neutral merchants for Batavian produce to be brought to Amsterdam, & there sold by the East India co. before the war pronounced not invalid.

The produce of a person's own plantation, in the colony of the enemy, though shipped in time of peace, is liable to be considered as the property of the enemy, by reason that the proprietor has incorporated himself with the permanent interests of the nation, as a holder of the soil, & is to be taken as a part of that country, in that particular transaction, independent of his own personal residence & occupation. . . . The flag & pass of a nation, taken up in war or peace, binds the vessel almost without exception. So, in the case of a strict exclusive colonial trade from the colony to the mother country, where the trade is limited to native subjects by the fundamental regulations of the state, & the national character is required to be established by oath, as in the case of the Spanish register ships. There, whoever asserts himself to be the proprietor, by the solemn averments of an oath, takes the fortunes of the community as to that property. These are all cases independent of times of peace or war, though generally it cannot be denied that the circumstance of peace or war, or the contemplation of those events will form a very material distinction in the considerations by which the national character of the transaction is to be judged. . . . A much greater latitude is allowed in peace than in war . . . because there are no rights of a third party concerned, there is no fraud to be guarded against. . . . When war comes, it is necessary to shut up some of the avenues of commerce, because otherwise the belligerent rights could not be protected (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROW ANNA CATHARINA (1804), 5 Ch. The period of the adoption of the flag & pass, whether before or after the outbreak of hostilities, makes no difference.

In the case of a ship under a neutral flag, captors may prove that all the property is not neutral, but that part belongs to the enemy; but the converse of the proposition is not true, that where a vessel is sailing under a hostile flag, a neutral can claim any part of the property under such flag.

A vessel under Russian colours, with a Russian pass, & whose papers disclosed only Russian owners, being captured, a claim was made by the master, as being a neutral, & the lawful owner of one-fourth part thereof:—Held: the claim could not be sustained, as the enemy's flag & pass imprinted a hostile character on the whole.—THE INDUSTRIE (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 444; Spinks, 54; 2 Eng. 94. ———.—]—By art. 57 of the Declaration of London, "subject to the provisions respecting transfer to another flag, the neutral or enemy character of a vessel is determined by the flag which she is entitled to fly." The Declaration of London was adopted by an Order in Council of October 29, 1914, subject to modification which did not affect art. 57.

In May, 1915, a vessel on a Greek register & entitled to fly the Greek flag was seized & was claimed by her registered owner, a naturalised Greek subject. The Prize Ct. in Egypt in Feb. 1916, condemned the vessel, finding that claimant was not the owner, but that the vessel was owned & controlled by the German Govt. The claimant appealed:—Held: the Order in Council of Oct. 29, 1914, so far as it adopted art. 57 of the Declaration of London, was not binding upon the Prize Ct. under the rule in The Zamora, No. 1071, post, since it prescribed & altered the law to be administered in a Prize Ct. by confining the test of neutral or enemy character to a single circumstance; further, a waiver of the Crown's belligerent rights could not be inferred from the terms of the Order, especially in a case of fraud; therefore the true facts as to the ownership had to be inquired into; &, upon the evidence, without casting any doubt upon the further findings of the Prize Ct., applt. was not the owner & consequently could not maintain the appeal.—THE PROTON, [1918] A. 99. British flag.]—The status of the Ionian Islands, & their relation to Great Britain, are regulated exclusively by the Treaty of Paris of Nov. 5, 1815. That constituted them a free & independent state, under the exclusive protection of Great Britain. The protecting sovereign has the right of making peace or war for them. But the intention to place them in a state of war must be clearly expressed, as they do not become so ex necessitate from Great Britain being at war. Great Britain had not declared war for them against Russia. Their trade, therefore, with Russia was not illegal, because they were neither British subjects nor allies in the war, nor enemies of Russia.

It is not a substantial objection to the interpretation of the treaty that anomalies arise therefrom.

The words "British vessels" mean, first, all vessels properly so called according to our municipal law. Secondly, all vessels under the British flag, though perhaps not strictly entitled thereto, because, by the Law of Nations, the carrying of the British flag stamps on them, as to other nations, the British national character, & thirdly, such words may mean vessels under neutral flags, but owned by British subjects (DR. Sect. 3.—Of ships: Sub-sect. 2, B. (a) & (b) i. & ii.] of giving complete & satisfactory proof thereof lies on claimant; without it the ct. cannot restore.

A neutral merchant, engaging for the sake of extraordinary profit in such suspicious transactions as the purchase of an enemy's vessel shortly before the war, is bound to give the clearest proof of the bona fides of the transfer.

(2) Though the ct., in condemning an enemy ship, cannot recognise a lien as against the captor, yet the ct. cannot restore to claimants when it appears that others who have not claimed have a lien or interest in the ship.

If A. claims a ship as his property, & it should turn out that he is a trustee for shares in that ship belonging to another person, I cannot restore that ship to A. . . . certainly not unless the cestui que trust is himself entitled to restitution. There ought in such cases to be a claim for a person equitably interested (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE ERNST MERCK (1854), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 87; Spinks, 98; 24 L. T. O. S. 303; 1 Jur. N. S. 119; 164 E. R. 322.

119. — —.]—On the day war was declared between Germany & Russia, Aug. 1, 1914, an English co. wired to a German co. accepting an offer to sell to the English co. two vessels belonging to the German co. then on the high seas, & flying the German flag. On Aug. 3, war was declared between England & Germany, & on the next day, the vessels were detained as prizes by collectors of customs in English ports:—Held: (1) the nationality of a vessel is determined by the flag she is entitled to fly, & at the time of seizure that flag was German; (2) the alleged transfer in transitu was invalid, as mere communications, which may suffice to bind the parties, are insufficient to change the ownership of the property as against captors, whether imminent or actual belligerents.—THE TOMMI, THE ROTHERSAND, [1914] P. 251; 84 L. 120. Transfer in contemplation of war—Validity —When absolute & bona fide.]—(1) E., a Russian subject, shortly before & in contemplation of war between Russia & England, sold a ship bona fide & absolutely to S., a neutral, taking one-third of the price down, it being agreed that E. was to be paid the residue out of the earnings of the ship. Before all the price was paid, the ship was seized as prize, whereupon S. claimed restoration:—Held: S. was entitled to restoration.

(2) A sale of a ship absolute & bona fide, though in contemplation of war, or even flagrante bello, is not illegal, but if there is any secret understanding that the ship is to be restored in the event of no war breaking out, or of a speedy peace, etc., the sale is held void in a prize ct.

(3) Liens, whether in favour of a neutral on an enemy's ship, or in favour of an enemy on a neutral's ship, are equally disregarded in a ct. of prize.

(4) There seems to be no positive rule that war cannot be said to be imminent, unless there be an embargo or some similar act on the part of the country about to be belligerent.—SORENSEN v. R.,

143. ———.]—Part of purchase-money not paid.]—(1) Lien, on freight, & parcel of goods pledged for the payment of the purchase-money of the ship, not sufficient to found a claim in a prize ct.

This ship appears to have been originally an American vessel sold to a Spanish merchant at Buenos Ayres, & seized on a voyage to this country, documented as belonging to a Spanish merchant, & sailing under the flag & pass of Spain. A claim is given on behalf of the former American proprietor, in virtue of a lien which he is said to have retained on the property, for the payment of the purchase-money; but such an interest cannot, I conceive, be deemed sufficient to support a claim of property in a ct. of prize (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) As to the title of property in the goods, which are said to have been going, as the funds out of which the payment for the ship was to have been made. That they were going for the payment of a debt, will not alter the property. There must be something more. Even if bills of lading are delivered, that circumstance will not be sufficient, unless accompanied with an understanding, that he who holds the bill of lading is to bear the risk of the goods, as to the voyage, & as to the market to which they are consigned, otherwise, though the security may avail pro tanto, it cannot be held to work any change in the property (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) It is said that a part of the purchase-money had not been paid. That objection can have little weight, since it is a matter solely for the consideration of the person who sells, to judge what mode of payment he will accept (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARIANNA (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 24; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 518; 165 E. R. 837.

149. ———.]—This case has been admitted to farther proof, owing entirely to the suppression of a circumstance, which, if the ct. had known, it would not have permitted farther proof to have been introduced; namely, that the ship has been left in the trade, & under the management of the former owner. Wherever that fact appears, the ct. will hold it to be conclusive, because, from the evidentia rei, the strongest presumption necessarily arises, that it is merely a covered & pretended transfer. The presumption is so strong, that scarcely any proof can avail against it. It is a rule which the ct. finds itself under the absolute necessity of maintaining. If the enemy could be permitted to make a transfer of the ship, & yet retain the management of it, as a neutral vessel, it would be impossible for the ct. to protect itself against frauds. . . . The inadequacy of the price, & the chasms appearing in the correspondence, are circumstances inconsistent with the probability of ownership; the course of trade has been entirely French, without interruption, excepting in one voyage to Barcelona; but even in that instance, the vessel returned again to a French port. . . . If the parties contracted with reference to a municipal law which is proved to differ from the English law, that fact is material in considering the intention of the parties as to the passing of the property.

A change of property in transitu, by the transfer of the bills of lading, where it is done without any view of accommodation to relieve the seller from the pressure or prospect of war [is legal]. . . . But in time of war it is a vicious contract, being a fraud on belligerent rights, not only in the particular transaction, but in the great facility which it would necessarily introduce, of evading those rights beyond the possibility of detection. . . . If the contemplation of war leads immediately to the transfer, & becomes the foundation of a contract that would not otherwise be entered into on the part of the seller; & this is known to be so done, in the understanding of the purchaser, though on his part there may be other concurrent motives . . . such a contract cannot be held good, on the same principle that applies to invalidate a transfer in transitu in time of actual war. . . . The same fraud is committed against the belligerent, not indeed as an actual belligerent, but as one who was, in the clear expectation of both the contracting parties, likely to become a belligerent, before the arrival of the property, which is made the subject of their agreement. The nature of both contracts is identically the same, being equally to protect the property from capture of war—not, indeed, in either case, from capture at the present moment when the contract is made, but from the danger of capture, when it was likely to occur. . . . Both contracts are framed with the same animus fraudandi, & are justly subject to the same rule (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JAN FREDERICK (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 128; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 434; 165 E. R. 721.

A mere delivering of the bill of lading . . . transfers only the right of delivery; but a transfer of the bill of lading, with a contract of sale accompanying it, may transfer the property in the ordinary course of things, so as effectually to bind the parties, & all others. . . . When war intervenes, another rule is set up by the Cts. of Admty., which interferes with the ordinary practice. In a state of war, existing or imminent, the property shall be deemed to continue as it was at the time of shipment till the actual delivery; this arises out of the state of war, which gives a belligerent a right to stop the goods of his enemy. If such a rule did not exist, all goods shipped in an enemy's country, would be protected by transfers which it would be impossible to detect. It is on that principle held, I believe, as a general rule, that property cannot be converted in transitu; & in that sense I recognise it as a rule of this Ct. This . . . arises out of a state of war, which creates new rights in other parties, & cannot be applied to transactions originating in a time of peace (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROW MARGARETHA (1799), 1 Ch. 214. — Goods shipped under f.o.b. contract—Payment made & documents handed over at port of loading—Ship chartered by neutral.]—A quantity of goods of a contraband character, namely foodstuffs & cattle feeding stuffs, were shipped by the American branch of a Frankfort firm on neutral vessels consigned to neutral firms in Scandinavia. It was alleged on behalf of the Crown: (a) that art. 2 of the Declaration of Paris was intended only to benefit neutrals & therefore an enemy could not claim its protection for his goods, or, alternatively, that the art. did not cover goods of a contraband nature even if they had not an enemy destination, & that such goods therefore were subject to condemnation; (b) that the doctrine of prize law, that property cannot pass from an enemy to a neutral during transit, applied, & that the goods still remained enemy property & therefore were liable to condemnation under (a), or, alternatively, to detention until the conclusion of peace or further order under the Reprisals Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915:—Held: (1) art. 2 of the Declaration of Paris does not merely enure for the benefit of neutrals so that in effect only the neutral shipowner has the right to complain of the interference with the voyage of his vessel by reason of the seizure of the goods laden on board; the art. protects the enemy goods themselves.

(2) In the following classes of cases the doctrine that property cannot pass from an enemy to a neutral during transit does not apply:—(a) where the goods are shipped under an f.o.b. contract on a vessel chartered by the neutral buyer, payment to be made against documents at the port of lading, & payment is made & all the documents handed over before the vessel sails; (b) where the goods are shipped on a general ship, not chartered by the buyer, under an f.o.b. contract including freight & insurance, or c.i.f. payment against documents at the port of loading, & payment is made & documents handed over before the ship sails; (c) where the same conditions exist, but payment is not made & the documents are not handed over till after the ship sails owing to the accidents of business & not because there is an intention to reserve the jus disponendi.

(3) There is no general principle that where goods seized as prize are sold, & an order for release is subsequently made, the successful claimants are entitled to interest upon the money because the Crown has had the use of it.

218. Sale of enemy goods by pledgees.—A British steamship, before the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany, left Hankow with sundry packages of tallow, shipped by a German, & consigned to a British firm. On arrival at Liverpool, after the outbreak of war, the consignees declined to take delivery of the goods from enemy subjects. Thereupon a Japanese bank, which, at the time of shipment, had made advances in respect of which the shippers were in default, exercised, as indorsees & holders of the bill of lading, their power of sale, by entering into a contract to sell the goods to a British firm. On the seizure of the tallow by the customs authorities as prize:—Held: the goods must be released to the purchasers, for, when the contract of sale was made, the enemy pledgors lost their right to redeem, & thereby ceased to be owners. The goods were, therefore, not subject to seizure as enemy property.—THE NINGHOW, [1916] P. 221; 115 L. T. 554; 31 T. L. R. 470; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 509.

219. Termination of transitus—Delivery of possession.—A German ship bound to Rotterdam with a non-contraband cargo belonging to a co. of enemy character took refuge at the outbreak of war in the then neutral port of Lisbon. The cargo was landed on the quay, & on Portugal entering into the war the ship was requisitioned by the Portuguese Govt. Subsequently the cargo was sold to a neutral co. who shipped it in neutral ships for Amsterdam, sending their managing director there for the purpose. A clause in the contract of sale gave the purchasers a right to reject the goods if they found them unsuited to their manufacturing business. The goods were captured on the voyage to Amsterdam:—Held: the clause in the contract did not render the sale ineffective as a transfer of the goods to the purchasers, & as they had taken actual delivery at Lisbon they were entitled to the release of the goods; the delivery of possession under the contract, but not the requisitioning of the German ship, terminated the original transitus & the belligerent right of capture.—THE VESTA, ETC., [1921] 1 A. 220. Sale to neutral by enemy—After seizure in prize—Detention under Order in Council.—Under the Reprisals Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915, non-contraband goods which were enemy property might be detained or sold, & if sold the proceeds were to remain in ct. until the conclusion of peace or further order. By the Treaty of Peace, art. 297 (b), signed at Versailles, the German Govt. ceded the right to retain & liquidate property in British or Allied territory which at the coming into force of the Treaty belonged to German nationals:—Held: goods which after their seizure in prize had been purchased by a neutral from their German owner, & which were ordered to be detained under the Order in Council, were not liable to be retained under the Treaty of Peace, & the neutral purchaser was entitled to an order for the payment out to him of money which he had deposited as a condition to their release.—THE OSCAR II. (No. 2), [1921] 1 A. SUB-SECT. 3.—PRODUCE OF ENEMY COUNTRY OR COLONY.

221. General rule.—[Where a contract between an enemy and neutral is entered into] if the motive is disclosed . . . the duties of neutrality may, on the disclosure of such a motive, create some new obligations on the neutral purchaser, arising from his relation to the other belligerent; the grand fundamental duty of neutrality being, that he is not to relieve one belligerent from the infliction of his adversaries' force, knowing the situation of affairs upon which the interposition of his act would have such a consequence. Neutrals may not be bound to inquire very accurately; but if it is clearly declared, either by the fact itself, or a fortiori, by express acknowledgments, they are bound to take notice of it, & regulate their conduct accordingly.

Suppose . . . a merchant should, at the beginning of a war, contract with a belligerent for the whole produce of a colony during the war, that must be held to be an illegal contract; because done evidently with the intention & consequence of placing that part of the belligerent's dominions, as to its productions, out of the reach of war & in a state of perfect security, in fraud of the rights of the other belligerents.

A residence of agents in the enemy's country has not been held generally to impress the character of that country upon the transactions of principals resident in a neutral country, where the transaction itself has been in other respects perfectly neutral. The neutrality of the trade shall prevail against the effect of that circumstance. But where the trade itself cannot claim to be so considered, & is carried on from the enemy's country, by agents representing the principals therein, the mere personal residence of the principals elsewhere, would hardly protect such a trade, so conducted, from being considered as the trade of any enemy (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE RENDSBORG (1802), 4 Ch. The sultanas were the produce of a vineyard owned by the Banque d'Orient at Magnessia, near Smyrna. After the declaration of hostilities the sultanas were seized at Liverpool as prize:—Held: questions of commercial domicile, & the effect of the Turkish Capitulations, & their alleged abolition before the war by the Sublime Porte, were immaterial, & the goods, being the produce of land situate in an enemy country, must be confiscated as enemy property, although shipped before war.—THE ASTURIAN, [1916] P. 150; 85 L. 231. General rule.]—A number of parcel post packages were seized under the Reprisals Orders in Council of Mar. 11, 1915, from the parcels mail of a Danish steamship bound from Copenhagen to New York as being goods of enemy origin & also as enemy property. The goods, which were manufactured in Germany & left the factories after the date of the Reprisals Order, had been ordered, & payment made, by various firms in America before the date of the Order, & in some cases before the outbreak of war. It was contended on behalf of these firms that the goods when seized were neutral goods as the property passed to the purchasers when the goods left the factories:—Held: in time of war goods shipped from an enemy country to a neutral country, or from a neutral to an enemy country, are regarded as enemy property, qua the rights of belligerent captors until delivery, & it makes no material difference that at the one end or the other there is a transit by land.—THE UNITED STATES, [1917] P. 30; 86 L. Sect. 1.]

239. — To enemy colony.—(1) The Gazette is the only authority of this species admitted & respected by the ct. for reasons too obvious to require a particular notice (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) It would be an extension of this rule of infection not justified by any former application of it to say, that after the contraband was actually withdrawn, a mortal taint stuck to the goods with which it had once travelled, & rendered them liable to confiscation even after the contraband itself was out of its reach (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) I am not authorised . . . to restore goods, although neutral property, passing in direct voyages between the mother country of the enemy & its colonies (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE IMMANUEL (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 186; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 217; 165 E. R. 284.

243. — Bullion sent in payment of goods.—Silver going from a French port to Hamburg; proof required that it was for cargoes already received.

What the ct. must require is to be satisfied that it was going in payment for cargoes already received in France. For it is pretty notorious that the French have been in such bad credit during this war, as to be obliged to remit bullion for their purchases beforehand. If that was to appear to have been the case in this instance, the silver must be condemned as French property (per CUR.).—THE CAROLINA (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 305; 165 E. R. 186.

244. — Freight & earnings accounted for.—Sentence of condemnation reversed in consequence of the shipper in the enemy's country fairly accounting to the neutral owner for the whole freight & earnings of the vessel.—THE TITUS (1809), 1 Act. 18; 12 E. R. 7, P. C.

245. — Loaded before outbreak of war.—Cargo belonging & consigned to claimants, a firm carrying on business in Chile, was laden on board a neutral vessel at Hamburg before the outbreak of war. The vessel sailed after the outbreak of war. She had to put into a Norwegian port for repairs, where she remained until Mar. 23, 1915. She then resumed her voyage to Chile. On Apr. 5, she was stopped by a British patrol vessel & sent into a British port, where the cargo was ordered to be discharged under art. IV. of the Reprisals Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915, as being cargo of enemy origin laden on board a vessel which sailed from a port other than a German port after Mar. 1, 1915. The ct. ordered the goods to be released on the ground that the vessel must be dealt with by reference not to art. IV., but to art. II. of the Order, which provides that no vessel which sailed from a German port after Mar. 1, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage with any goods on board laden at such port; & that, as she sailed from a German port before Mar. 1, she was immune from the obligation to discharge her cargo. The cargo owners claimed damages & costs on the ground that the seizure & detention of their goods was unlawful:—Held: the claim must be disallowed. The legal question at issue was of importance & not easy to decide, & the obligation to pay damages & costs should not be imposed upon the Crown as a consequence of the mistaken construction placed upon the Order in Council.—THE SIGURD, [1917] P. 250; 87 L. J. P. 14; 117 L. T. 639; 34 T. L. R. 16; 62 Sol. Jo. 36; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 153.

246. — Export through neutral port.—Goods belonging to a firm having its principal place of business in the United States & a branch in Germany were sent by the German branch to Copenhagen & thence dispatched by parcels post to the New York house. They were subsequently seized on board the Danish ship United States & discharged in a British port under the "Reprisals" Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915. On behalf of the New York house it was contended that at the time of "shipment," that is, when put on board ship at Copenhagen, the property had passed to them & therefore was in a neutral firm:—Held: transit begins where the goods commence their journey & not at the place where they are first placed on board ship; & according to the well established principle of prize law governing the passing of property while in transitu the goods were not merely of enemy origin, but remained the property of the enemy branch, & as such must be ordered to be sold & the proceeds paid into ct., there to be detained to be dealt with at the conclusion of peace.—THE UNITED STATES (No. 2) (1917), 2 P. 251. — — — — — (1) The question of the ownership of goods carried by sea in time of war must be determined in accordance with doctrines of prize law & not of municipal law. The same rules for determining ownership must be applied when the doctrine of contagion or infection is invoked.

(2) It is an established rule of prize law that goods seized in transitu during war & contracted to become on delivery the property of the enemy, are to be regarded as enemy property, even though the shippers, who have the strict legal ownership according to municipal law, are admittedly neutrals. Conversely, goods shipped by an enemy to a neutral are regarded as enemy property until actual delivery.

(3) A partner in a house of trade in an enemy country is, as to the concerns & trade of that house, deemed to be an enemy, & his share in such trade is liable to confiscation notwithstanding his own residence in a neutral country.

(4) Where a person has interests in both an enemy & a neutral house of trade, & the transactions of the two are mixed up, the ct. will not unravel the tangle. The duty of so doing rests on the claimants, & if they fail they must suffer the consequences.—THE POSTREIRO (1917), 3 P. Cas. 275.

Gothenburg net cash against documents on arrival at Gothenburg & subject to the opening of a confirmed credit by the buyers through a Swedish bank, a number of bags of coffee, marked with the initials of the buyers, a Gothenburg firm, were shipped at Santos on two neutral vessels to be delivered according to the bills of lading, which were in the buyer's name at Gothenburg. The letter confirming credit was sent by the Swedish bankers to the nominal shippers at Santos, the real shippers being the Santos branch of a Hamburg firm, the credits to be available on the shippers' sight drafts on the bank accompanied by bills of lading & invoices. The insurances were effected by the buyers, the drafts & documents were forwarded from Santos & presented to the Swedish bank for payment, but in each case this was effected after the date of the seizure of the goods as prize. The buyers alleged that the property had passed to them on shipment:—Held: according to prize law, if the real shippers were to be regarded as enemy traders, the goods would be treated as enemy goods during transit, & if as neutral traders & the goods were destined for the use of, or to be at the disposal of, the Hamburg firm on arrival in Sweden, they would be treated as enemy goods whether the legal property according to municipal law remained in the shippers or not.—THE ANNIE JOHNSON, THE KRONPRINSESSAN MARGARETA, [1918] P. 154; 87 L. 253. — From enemy colony—False destination.]—Colonial trade, on the part of neutral merchants, on a destination between the colony & the mother country, pronounced illegal. Cargo condemned.

If it should appear that this cargo was actually going from the colony to the mother country, on a real destination to Amsterdam, I shall hold myself bound to pronounce this cargo subject to condemnation . . . the trade between the colony & the mother country in Europe, being opened by the enemy for his own relief under the pressure of war, cannot innocently be undertaken by a neutral; nor without the hazard of rendering him liable to be considered as giving immediate aid & adherence to that belligerent, to the unjust disadvantage of his adversary (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NANCY (1800), 3 Ch. 255. —.]—It is certainly true that a continued voyage from the colony of the enemy to the mother country, or to any other ports but those of the country to which the vessel belongs, will subject the cargo to confiscation; & the only point which the ct. has to decide is, whether the voyage in question is to be considered as a continued voyage or not. It is a question in its nature subject to very considerable difficulties in particular cases; & one on which the ct. must exercise its judgment with great caution on the special circumstances which compose the substance of each case, & with great care not to attribute more weight to any particular fact than what it justly demands (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARIA (1805), 5 Ch. Rob. 364; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 495; 165 E. R. 806.

256. — From colony of another enemy.]—Colonial trade from the colony to the mother country. Diversions by capture of a French privateer towards a French port. Such compulsory diversion will not defeat the illegality of the original voyage.

This deviation being to a French port, it would be a voyage from the colony of one enemy to the mother country of an allied enemy . . . which is attended with undistinguishable consequences as to the cargo (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

In cases of contraband, the offence of carrying the cargo is in its own nature as great as the offence of sending it: but yet a relaxation has in ordinary cases been introduced in favour of the ship where the cargo is not the property of the same owner. Here the ship & cargo belong to the same person, & the offence being equally known, it would be impossible to find any distinction in principle, why the same penalty would not attach on both (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MINERVA (1801), 3 Ch. 257. — On enemy ship.]—(1) A captor is not entitled to freight from the owners of cargo which has been brought before the Prize Ct. & released, unless the cargo has been carried to its port of destination according to the intent of the contracting parties.

(2) According to prize law, goods on an enemy vessel consigned to an enemy port are prima facie enemy goods, & the onus is on claimants who allege that the goods belong to them, as neutrals, to satisfy the ct. with clear evidence.—THE ROLAND (1915), 84 L. J. P. 127; 31 T. L. R. 357.

(2) They [a King's ship & a privateer] both represent the public force of the country, & are both armed with public authority. The privateer coming up first had a right to take possession, & if resistance had been offered by the French captain it would have justified any violent consequences that might have ensued. The enemy has not a liberty of choosing to whom he will surrender; when the surrender is once compelled, he is bound to submit to the first armed cruiser that comes up (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARIAMNE (1803), 5 Ch. 262. — Prize manned by prize crew.]—The detaching a prize crew after capture to take charge of & to bring a prize & its native crew of prisoners of war safely to a port of the captors, is essentially a warlike naval operation. A merchantman, on lawful capture by a belligerent vessel, & whilst held by a naval prize crew detached from that vessel, is in the actual possession of the Govt. of her captors. Her prize crew are still part of the crew of the belligerent vessel, share in capture made by that vessel, & may make lawful captures whilst on board the prize. The prize, therefore, ceases to be a merchantman, & becomes a vessel engaged in the naval operations of her captors. A British steamtug was sent by her owners, Her Majesty being neutral, to tow such a vessel from British waters to the waters of her captors, the tug owners knowing that she was a prize; the tug performed the towage service:—Held: the towing was assisting in a warlike naval operation, & that the sending the tug for that purpose was a despatching for the purpose of taking part in the naval service of a belligerent within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (c. 90), s. 8 (4), & the tug was therefore forfeited to the Crown.—*THE GAUNTLET, DYKE v. (2) Enemy vessels stand in some respects on a different footing from neutral vessels in regard to the laws of prize. Carriage of contraband to a belligerent port does not impart an enemy character to a neutral ship. She cannot lawfully be destroyed nor her crew treated as prisoners of war. Carriage of contraband is not unlawful, as is aiding an enemy in an expedition. It is only an adventure which the offended belligerent may, if he can visit with the penalty of capture & condemnation by a Court of Prize (LORD LORE-BURN, C.).—ANDERSEN v. MARTEN, [1908] A. SECT. 2.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO CAPTURE.

266. General rule.]—Capture consists in compelling the vessel captured to submit to the will of the captor. Hauling down the flag by a merchant ship, even in conjunction with stopping her engines as ordered, is not an unequivocal act of submission. Four German ships were captured in Dutch territorial waters, the violation of neutrality being inadvertent. The ships were requisitioned for the use of the Crown under an order of the Prize Ct. made under Prize Ct. Rules, 1914, Ord. 29, upon the usual undertaking to pay the appraised values into the Prize Ct. Two of the ships while so requisitioned were sunk by German submarines. By the Treaty of Versailles, made at the conclusion of the war, Holland not being a party thereto, Germany recognised the validity of orders of the Prize Ct., & made to the Allied & Associated Powers certain cessions of ships & of other property of German nationals in the territories of those powers. On a claim by the Dutch Govt. for restoration of the ships to Dutch waters, or for their appraised values, with compensation for their user:—Held: (1) the Dutch Govt. was entitled to have the two ships which remained afloat returned to Dutch waters, free of expense, & to receive the appraised values of the two sunken ships, but not compensation for user of the ships; & the above stated rights of the Dutch Govt. in the Prize Ct. were not affected by the provisions of the treaty. (2) A requisition order, unlike a decree for condemnation, is not a judgment in rem; it does not purport to affect the property in the ship or goods.—THE PELLWORM, [1922] 1 A. C. 292; 91 L. J. 273. — Agreement to hold vessels at disposal of Prize Court.]—A German co. carried on at Port Said the business of coaling steamers, & for that purpose owned lighters, tugs, & motor boats. The tugs were capable of open sea voyages, but were used exclusively in harbour; none of the other craft were capable of taking the open sea. Prior to Apr. 1916, the co. had carried on the business under licence. In that month the General Officer Commanding revoked the licence, & appointed a liquidator of the business, who thereafter had possession of the craft so far as they were not in use by the naval & military authorities. In July, 1916, the Procurator, intending to take proceedings in prize, informed the liquidator that he should apply for an order for substituted service on the liquidator. It was agreed between them that upon proceedings being taken the liquidator should continue to hold the craft at the disposal of the Crown & the Prize Ct. The craft were all in the Suez Canal or its ports. A writ claiming condemnation was issued, & by order was served on the liquidator. No objection was raised at the trial or upon resp's. case upon the appeal that there had not been a seizure:—Held: (1) there had been a sufficient seizure to give the Prize Ct. jurisdiction; (2) the seizure was not a breach of art. 4 of the Suez Canal Convention, & had it been so the seizure would not have been bad.—*PROCURATOR IN EGYPT v. Actual hostilities are not to be reckoned only from the date of the declaration; but the declaration has been applied with a retroactive force (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HERSTELDER (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 114; 165 E. R. 116.

276. ———.]—The claim is given for several persons as inhabitants of Demarara, not settling there during the time of British possession, nor averring an intention of retiring when that possession ceased. They are therefore to be treated under this general view as Dutch subjects, unless it can be shown that there are any other circumstances by which they are protected. It is contended that there are such circumstances & that they are these: that the property was taken in a state of peace, & that the proprietors are now become British subjects, & consequently that this property could not be considered as the property of an enemy, either at the time of capture or adjudication. . . . That alone would not protect them, because the ct. has, without any exception, condemned all other property of Dutchmen taken before the war. . . . That the declaration had a retroactive effect, applying to all property previously detained, & rendering it liable to be considered as the property of enemies taken in

The vessels & craft had been sent by rail to those places from the ports by the owners, under the authority of a German officer, in order to prevent them falling into the hands of the British forces:—Held: the vessels & craft not being taken in pursuit were not the subject of maritime prize.—THE ANICHAB, [1922] 1 A. (2) In view of the fact that reliance was placed on immunities alleged to be claimable under international conventions, no objection has been raised, such as was raised in The Mûve, No. 289, post, to the presence of enemy owners to be heard before their Lordships on appeal (per CUR.).—THE PINDOS, THE HELGOLAND, THE ROSTOCK, [1916] 2 A. ## SUB-SECT. 2.—ON OPEN SEA.

284. Whether lawful—Vessel sailing from neutral port—For purpose of effecting capture.][—THE TWEE GEBROEDERS, No. 309, post.

285. ————] — (1) Captors must understand that they are not to station themselves in the mouth of a neutral river for the purpose of exercising the rights of war from that river, much less in the very river itself (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The rule of law on this subject is terre dominium finitur, ubi finitur armorum vis, & since the introduction of firearms, that distance has usually been recognised to be about three miles from the shore. But it so happens in this case that a question arises as to what is to be deemed the shore, since there are a number of little mud islands comprised of earth & trees drifted down by the river which form a kind of portico to the mainland. . . . I think that the protection of territory is to be reckoned from these islands, & that they are the natural appendages of the coast on which they border, & from which, indeed, they are formed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) The actual capture took place within the distance of three miles from the islands & at the very threshold of the river. It is said that the act of capture is to be carried back to the commencement of the pursuit, & if a contest begins before, it is lawful for a belligerent cruiser to follow & seize his prize within the territory of a neutral state. . . . If nothing objectionable had appeared in the conduct of the captors before, the mere following to such a place as this is, would I think not invalidate a seizure otherwise just & lawful (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(4) Captors must understand that it is not the value of the cargo, but the want of proof, & the appearance of circumstances as to the property that should induce a seizure, & that their conduct in this respect should not be influenced merely by the splendour of a large sum of money appearing in their sight. In such a case it would be falling short of the justice done to the individuals who have sustained injury by such misconduct if I did not follow up the restitution . . . with a decree of costs & damages (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(5) The seizure was made . . . "because there was not any clearance or register on board." These are defects which may certainly, if unexplained, justify a seizure (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(6) The ship with this cargo on board was brought to England for adjudication; & it lies on the captor to exonerate himself from the unpropriety of this act; because, though the instructions to cruisers give something of a discretion to captors as to the port to which they are to bring their prize, "to some convenient port," it is a discretion which must be cautiously exercised (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ANNA (1805), 5 Ch. 289. What constitutes capture at sea—Capture in Firth of Forth.][—(1) The question whether a uniform rule as to the right of an enemy owner to appear ought to prevail in all cases of claimants who may be entitled to protection or relief, whether partial or otherwise, is not a matter of international law, but of the practice of the ct., & as by Prize Ct. Rules, 1914, Ord. 45, in cases not provided for by the Rules, "the practice of the late High Ct. of Admty. of England in prize proceedings shall be followed, or such other practice as the President may direct":—Held: the practice of the ct. shall be, that whenever an alien enemy conceives that he is entitled to any protection, privilege, or relief under any of the Hague Conventions of 1907, he shall be entitled to appear as claimant, & to argue his claim before this ct., the grounds of his claim being stated in the affidavit to lead to appearance required to be filed under Prize Ct. Rules, 1914, Ord. 3, r. 5.

(2) Shortly after the declaration of war between Great Britain & Germany, a German merchant sailing vessel, owned by her master, a German subject, was captured in the Firth of Forth by one of His Majesty's cruisers & taken into Leith. It was contended on behalf of the Crown that the vessel was captured "at sea." On the other hand, it was urged that the vessel was seized within the Port of Leith, & alternatively that she was taken within territorial waters, & not "on the high seas," & therefore, was not confiscable, but only liable to detention:—Held: the vessel was captured "at sea" & liable to condemnation as lawful prize, for the word "port," as used in the Hague Conventions, does not mean the "fiscal" port, which may cover a considerable area & include other ports, but must be construed in its usual & limited popular or commercial sense as a place where ships are in the habit of coming for the purpose of loading or unloading, embarking or disembarking, & therefore, the vessel was not seized in any "port" so, as to limit the right of the captor to detention only, & the question whether the vessel was in territorial waters at the time of the seizure was not material.—THE MOWE, [1915] P. 1; 84 L. 291. — Goods on British ship.]—A cargo of oil belonging to an enemy as a British ship, brought into a British port & pumped for safe custody into tanks on shore, may be lawfully seized as prize in such tanks, & the delivery of a letter from the Customs House authorities, addressed to the master, stating that the cargo is placed under detention is an effectual seizure.

A cargo of petroleum oil in bulk, owned by a German co., was shipped at a neutral port on board a British vessel bound for Hamburg. The vessel reached the English Channel after the outbreak of hostilities between Great Britain & Germany & was diverted by her owners to Purfleet, where, under their orders she proceeded to discharge the oil into tanks on shore. When the larger part of the oil had been so discharged the whole cargo was seized as prize. It was subsequently condemned as lawful prize & as droits of Admty.:—Held: (1) the cargo was not immune from condemnation by reason of having been shipped in a British vessel before the outbreak of hostilities; (2) the jurisdiction of the Prize Ct. extended to the oil seized while in the tanks, since that jurisdiction depended not upon the situation of the oil when seized, but upon the fact that it was seized as prize; (3) the whole cargo having become liable to seizure & condemnation upon the outbreak of hostilities, the oil discharged into the tanks did not cease to be so liable by reason of the discharge, & this was the case whether or not the tanks formed part of the port.—THE ROUMANIAN, [1916] 1 A. After the outbreak of war with Turkey the goods were seized as prize & droits of Admty.:—Held: on the principles laid down in The Roumanian, No. 291, ante, the goods were the subject of seizure as maritime prize & must be condemned.

These goods were put in that warehouse & remained there as the goods of a Turkish subject up to the time of seizure, & they must be condemned to the Crown as prize & droits of Admiralty (SIR SAMUEL EVANS).—THE EDEN HALL, [1916] P. 78; 85 L. 294. — — —.]—After the outbreak of war a quantity of hides were shipped on a British vessel by the Bangkok branch of an Austrian co.

consigned to the co.'s branch in Manchester. The hides were landed in Liverpool & stored in a warehouse in Argyle Street, Liverpool, where they were seized as prize.

By para. 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation (No. 2) of Sept. 9, 1914, "where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, allied, or neutral territory, not being neutral territory in Europe, transactions by or with such branch shall not be treated as transactions by or with an enemy."

It was contended (a) that this para. &/or certain correspondence between the manager of the Manchester branch & the Trading with the Enemy Committee constituted a licence to the Manchester & Bangkok branches of the enemy co. to trade; (b) that the warehouse in Argyle Street was outside the limits of the port of Liverpool, & that on these grounds the goods were immune from confiscation:—Held: (1) para. 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation (No. 2) gave no protection to the goods. It afforded protection to a person acting within it from being convicted of the offence of trading with the enemy, but it had no application to the case of the transfer of goods belonging to an enemy from one branch house to another so as to affect the property in the goods, & could not be construed as taking away the right to seize enemy goods on a British ship or in a British port; (2) a licence from the Crown must be strictly construed & proved, & the Trading with the Enemy Committee neither had the authority to give a licence which would defeat the rights of captors, nor purported to give such licence; (3) the warehouse was a warehouse of the port of Liverpool, & on that ground, therefore, & on the broader ground that goods which had been subject to capture as enemy property while afloat remained subject to seizure when landed, the hides were confiscable as prize.—THE ACHILLES, [1917] P. 218; 86 L. J. P. 170; 117 L. T. 414; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 151; 2 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 544.

295. — — —.]—These enemy goods, discharged from various vessels, were warehoused at the time of the outbreak of war at various wharves, & according to the decisions in The Roumanian, No. 291, ante, & The Eden Hall, No. 293, ante, they are subject to seizure as droits of Admty. The only question which arises is whether the goods, which have been brought in on The Batavier II. & The Batavier VI.—which were two neutral vessels—are protected by the Declaration of Paris. I am not bound by the case of The Dandolo & The Cubota in the colonial Prize Ct. of Colombo, Ceylon, but I have pleasure in saying that I think those cases were properly decided. The two Arts. of the Declaration of Paris which affect this matter are Arts. 2 & 3, & they read as follows:—Art. 2: "The neutral flag covers enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband"; & Art. 3, "Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to capture under the enemy's flag." These goods, no doubt, had been under the neutral flag, but they were no longer under the neutral flag at the time of seizure, nor at the outbreak of war, as I understand, & therefore no difficulty arises, in my opinion, under the Declaration of Paris.

I declare that they were properly seized, & I condemn the proceeds accordingly as droits of Admty. (SIR SAMUEL EVANS).—THE BATAVIER II., [1918] P. 66, n.; 2 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 432.

SUB-SECT. 4.—IN TERRITORIAL WATERS OF NEUTRAL STATE.

A. In General.

296. Whether lawful — General rule.] — DE
 FORTUYN (1760), Burrell, 175; 167 E. R. 526.

Annotation:—Consd. The Valeria, [1921] 1 A. C. 477.

297. ———.]—The sanctity of a claim of territory is . . . very high. . . . When the fact is established, it overrules every other consideration. The capture is done away; the property must be restored, notwithstanding that it may actually belong to the enemy, & if the captor should appear to have erred wilfully, & not merely through ignorance, he would be subject to further punishment . . . .

The claim of territory is a matter stricti juris, & must be made out by clear & unimpeached evidence. The right of seizing the property of the enemy is a right which extends, generally speaking, universally, wherever that property is found.
 The protection of neutral territory is an exception to the general rule only. . . . If the fact had been that [a] privateer had made this capture in a neutral port, or whilst lying in harbour with a view of making that harbour an habitual station for captures, I should have concurred in reprobating the practice in the strongest terms, but if, whilst a privateer is accidentally lying there, she sees an enemy approaching, she may go out & capture, without any violation of the peace or immunity of the neutral port, provided this is done beyond the limits of the port. . . .

I have never understood that the rule against the admission of claims, which stand in entire opposition to the papers & to the preparatory examinations, was applicable to cases arising before the war (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROW

300. ———.]—A number of enemy vessels were met by a British squadron on the high seas.
 The vessels immediately hauled down their flags & afterwards stopped their engines when ordered to do so. They refused, however, to steam astern or to steer in a westerly direction according to orders, & eventually drifted into Dutch territorial waters. They were then boarded & taken into a British port:—Held: (1) the capture of the vessels was not complete until the boarding parties took possession; (2) consequently there had been a violation of Dutch neutrality & there must be an order for release.

(3) I do not think that there was any deliberate intention so to violate it [Dutch neutrality], &
 I do not find in this case any of those circumstances which are necessary to subject the Crown to a liability for damages or costs (LORD STERN-capture of a ship & all the operations immediately leading to it took place outside the territorial waters of Norway & that the ship & cargo must be condemned on the ground that the cargo was absolute contraband going to Germany.

It was contended that the place where the ship was captured was near a bay or inclosed waters & that the limit was to be taken from the line marking the seaward edge of the bay. . . .
 Assuming that these waters formed a bay the
 ct. thought that the headlands ought to be taken to be the Naze Light on the east & on the west the head of the mainland. . . . The line being thus fixed the questions of fact remained to be determined whether at the material times, either the capturing or captured vessel was within or outside three nautical miles of it (EVANS, P.).—THE

321. Signalling apparatus leased to ship-owners.—A submarine signalling apparatus, fixed partly in the forehold & partly in the chart room of an enemy's ship, was claimed by a neutral co. who, as they alleged, leased the apparatus to the owners of the ship on terms which provided that rent should be paid & that the apparatus should remain the sole & exclusive property of the co.:—Held: the apparatus was not "neutral goods" under enemy's flag within art. 3 of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, as "goods" there meant merchandise, which this was not; & this apparatus being part of the ship, must in the Prize Ct. be condemned with the ship.—THE SCHLESSEN (1914), 84 L. The vessels carrying them would also be subject to condemnation, provided that in the case of a vessel which called at an appointed British or Allied port for examination of her cargo, condemnation under the Order should not be pronounced. No port or ports were appointed under the Order.

A Dutch steamship bound direct from Rotterdam to Stockholm with a cargo of coal, the produce of Belgian collieries in German occupation, was seized as prize off the Dutch coast under the authority of the above Order, & ship & cargo were condemned. The coal had been won, sold, & shipped as part of a German Govt. trade, carried on for the benefit of the enemy in prosecuting the war:—Held: (1) the Order was not contrary to the law of nations; &, upon the evidence, was not

334. — Deep sea fishing vessel—Engaged in enemy trade.—By Art. 3 of the Hague Convention, No. XI., 1907, relative to certain restrictions on the exercise of the right of capture in maritime war, "vessels employed exclusively in coast fisheries . . . together with their appliances, rigging, tackle, & cargo, are exempt from capture"; but, apart from the question whether, in the existing war between Great Britain & Germany, the latter power can rely upon the Convention, this immunity from capture will not extend to a German deep sea fishing vessel engaged in a commercial enterprise forming part of the trade of the enemy country. Under Prize Ct. Rules, 1914, Ord. XV., a prize ct. is not bound to require the best official evidence of a capture, but may in its discretion make use of other information.

The commander of one of His Majesty's ships who cannot take a captured vessel into port, or put a prize crew on board, ought to enter the time & place of capture in the vessel's log, or make a declaration in the presence of the vessel's master, so as to provide direct legal evidence thereof.—THE BERLIN, [1914] P. 265; 84 L. 335. Neutral ship—Trading from one enemy port to another—Ordinance against neutrals engaging in such trade—Evidence of adoption.—Coasting trade of France expressly forbidden to neutrals by French ordinance.

This is the case of a [neutral] ship taken on a voyage from one French port to another, which is certainly a sufficient justification of the capture, because the very circumstance of being engaged in conducting the trade of the enemy from one port to another, will justly subject the vessel to inquiry; & perhaps in some future case, the ct. may have occasion to consider how far the regulations . . . may not make such a trade liable to be considered as a case of adoption. . . . Although captors may have made a justifiable seizure, yet they may still forfeit that title by subsequent misconduct (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SPECULATION (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 293; 1 Eng. Pr. 338. — Trading between ports denied to British flag—Effect of Order in Council.—Trade between Prussian ports illegal under the Order in Council, Jan. 7, 1807.

This is the case of a Prussian ship & cargo, captured on a voyage from Stettin to Koningsburg, both Prussian ports; & I am of opinion that, under the Order in Council prohibiting vessels to trade between ports from which the British flag is excluded, this voyage is illegal. It is true that, by a subsequent Order in Council, of Nov. 25, 1807, Prussian ships are permitted to trade between neutral port & neutral port; but I think this Order is controlled as well by its own import as by the former Order of Jan. 7, so far as respects the trade from one Prussian port to another, from both of which the British flag is now excluded. Because ports so interdicted to the commerce of this country, in compliance with the wishes & policy of the enemy, cannot be brought within the description of ports strictly neutral, though the enemy ship seized in time of war failed to discharge the onus of proving his ignorance of the outbreak of hostilities when entering a British port, the ct. condemned the ship as a country of which they form a part may not be at war with this country, & may have a general character of neutrality. The ports themselves are in effect hostile; they derive a character of hostility from the exclusion of the British flag, in the same manner, & under the same penalties of prohibition, as would be applied in ports directly hostile. A part of this cargo, it has been suggested, is entitled to peculiar consideration, as it is represented to be the property of the King of Prussia himself; & certainly, if it could be shown that these were articles going for the private accommodation of the sovereign, it would be proper, conformably to that comity which is observed in such cases by cts. of prize, to restore it; but in this instance, the property in question consists of a considerable quantity of salt, evidently not intended for the private consumption of the sovereign, but for the purposes of trade or revenue, & therefore it cannot be so favourably distinguished. #### SUB-SECT. 5.—CARTEL SHIPS.

342. Nature of cartel.—The privileges & immunities of cartel ships are of a very sacred nature, & are to be received with great respect, inasmuch as they tend very beneficially to mitigate the miseries of war, & to facilitate the return of peace, by the removal of those obstructions, which put a stop to the intercourse of nations. With respect to the general character of contracts of this description, I am disposed to hold, that the actual existence of a war is not essentially necessary to give effect to them, but that it will be sufficient, if they are entered into prospectively, & in expectation of approaching war (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CAROLINA (1807), 6 Ch. Rob. 336; 165 E. R. 953.

343. Immunity from capture—Though not strictly provided with documents of cartel.—Privileges of cartel allowed to a ship employed in carrying from Martinique to France, certain French prisoners taken at St. Lucie, agreeable to the understanding of the commanding officer of the British forces at St. Lucie, though not strictly provided with the formal documents of cartel, etc.

If, under such a representation of the agreement, made to this man, the French officers had taken up this vessel, it would, I think, be straining matters to a degree, not quite discreet or legal, to object against the validity of such a protection, that it was not strictly in the form of cartel unless it could be shown that such pretensions had been brought forward from some unfair or fraudulent motive (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—LA GLOIRE (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 193; 165 E. R. 745.

344. When immunity commences—Whether protected by prospective employment.—Cartel ships going from the Texel to Flushing, to take exchanged prisoners on board to bring them to England, restored.

I must lay it down as clear, that ships are to be protected in this office, ad eundem et redeundum, both in carrying prisoners, & returning from that service. . . . It is the employment, & not the future intention, that protects; they ask protection therefore beyond the reach of the strict principle, which allows it only eundo & redeundo. I think, however, that the protection may be not improperly extended, if it appears that they had in any manner entered upon their functions, by being put into a state of actual preparation, & equipment for their employment. . . . The passage of ships from one of their own ports to another is liable to more suspicion. . . . A ship going to be employed as a cartel ship is not protected by mere intention on her way from one port to another of her own country, for the purpose of taking on herself that character, when she arrives at the latter port (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE DAIFJIE (1800), 3 Ch. which hospital ships are entitled under Art. 1 ceases if they are used to commit acts harmful to the enemy, but that the presence of wireless telegraphy apparatus on board is not a sufficient reason for withdrawing protection:—Held: without laying down an absolute rule that the mere sending by a hospital ship of a wireless message in secret code will of itself forfeit her right to protection & subject her to capture & condemnation, it may certainly be laid down that if such messages are sent a clear & satisfactory record of them must be kept, so that when the right of search is exercised there may be reasonable evidence of the messages & of the necessity, if there can be any such necessity on the part of a hospital ship, for sending them in a secret code.

An appeal from the Prize Ct. on facts must be treated as a rehearing in the same way as an appeal to the Ct. of Appeal from a judge sitting without a jury in the High Ct. There is jurisdiction to review the findings of the judge, but the Appeal Ct. attaches great weight to the fact that the judge below has heard the witnesses & practically acts on the opinion of the judge as to the credibility of the witnesses before him & the weight to be attached to their evidence.

If any one by a deliberate act destroys a document which, according to what its contents may have been, would have told strongly either for him or against him, the strongest possible presumption arises that if it had been produced it would have told against him; & even if the document is destroyed by his own act but under circumstances in which the intention to destroy evidence may fairly be considered rebutted, still he has to suffer (SIR ARTHUR CHANNELL).—THE OPHELIA, [1916] 2 A. SUB-SECT. 1.—ASSOCIATION IN COMMON ENTERPRISE.

A. In General.

352. General rule.—The Vestal received orders from the Admiralty to join D.; she accordingly did join him, & formed one of the fleet under his command, & received directions from him to cruise off the Texel, to reconnoitre & obtain intelligence of the Dutch fleet, which she did. D. cruised till the latter end of Sept., & then returned to Yarmouth, ordering T. to sail with two or three vessels to watch the motions of the enemy; & leaving directions for the Vestal to put herself under the command of T. The Vestal accordingly did join T., & made one of the ships under his command bring part of D.'s fleet, & on falling in with the Dutch fleet, on Oct. 8, was sent by T. to reconnoitre them. On the next day T. gave the Vestal a written order to sail immediately for the first port in England, using her utmost endeavours, to fall in with D. on the way, to send an express to the Admiralty, & then to use his best endeavours immediately to fall in with D. wherever he was, & acquaint him with the situation of the Dutch fleet. In pursuance of these orders she sailed to England, landed the dispatches, & again returned, & actually joined D., on Oct. 13. After the Vestal was so detached, T., with His Majesty's ships cruising with him, joined D., & never lost sight of the Dutch fleet, from the time the Vestal was so detached to the time of the capture of the ship proceeded against. . . . When D. came up with the body of the British fleet, then the chase began & that is in my estimation to be considered as the true point of commencement of actual engagement in this case. . . . the Vestal was not in sight at the time of the commencement of the chase & therefore she is not in law entitled to share in the capture (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The principle of mere common enterprise alone will not be sufficient; it is not sufficiently specific; it must be more limited. . . . The being in sight, or seeing the enemy's fleet accidentally a day or two before, will not be sufficient; it must be at the commencement of the engagement, either in the act of chasing or in preparations for chase or afterwards during its continuance (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

364. Co-operation of military transport.—(1) Claim of joint capture, by India ships carrying troops to the Cape of Good Hope, & asserting to have contributed to the capture, by intimidation occasioned by their appearance, not allowed.

I do not see that they can be considered in their original character, as more than transport vessels, liable to be called upon occasionally to act, with alacrity & vigour . . . but not deriving from that circumstance . . . any title to invest them with a military character; for the mere conveyance of troops would have no such effect. At the same time it is true, that a military character might be afterwards impressed upon them, by the nature & course of their subsequent employment. If they had been associated to act, in conjunction with the King's fleet, & did so act, they may acquire an interest, which, on proper application, will be sure to meet with due attention . . . mere association will not do, the plea must go further, & show in what capacity they were associated, & that capacity must be directly military. 'Transports are associated with fleets & armies for various purposes, connected with, as subservient to the military uses of those fleets & armies. But if they are transports merely, & as such are employed simply in the transportation of stores as men, they do not rise above their proper mercantile character in consequence of such an employment. The employment must be that of an immediate application to the purposes of direct military operations, in which they are to take part (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) Cases of joint chasing at sea differ so materially from the cases of conjunct operations at land, that they are with great danger of inaccuracy applied to illustrate each other. In joint chasing at sea, there is the overt act of pursuing, by which the design & actual purpose of the party may be ascertained, & much intimidation may be produced; but in cases of conjunct operations at land, it is not the mere intrusion even of a commissioned ship that would entitle parties to share. . . . It would be a very inconvenient doctrine, that private ships of war, by watching an opportunity, & intruding themselves into an expedition, which the public authority in no degree committed to them, should be at liberty to say, "we will co-operate"; & that they should be permitted to derive an interest from such a spontaneous act, to the disadvantage of those to whom the service was originally entrusted (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE (1799), 2 Ch. 368. ———.—Much more is necessary than a mere being in sight to entitle an army to share jointly with the navy, in the capture of an enemy's fleet. The mere presence, or being in sight of different parties of naval force, is, with few exceptions sufficient to entitle them to be joint captors; because they are always conceived to have that privity of purpose which may constitute a community of interests. But between land & sea forces, acting independently of each other, & for different purposes, there can be no such privity presumed; & therefore, to establish a claim of joint capture between them, there must be a contribution of actual assistance, & the mere presence, or being in sight, will not be sufficient. . . . When there is no preconcert, it must be not a slight service, nor an assistance merely rendering the capture more easy or convenient, but some very material service, that will be deemed necessary to entitle an army to the benefit of joint capture. Where there is preconcert, it is not of so much consequence that the service should be material, because then each party performs the service that is previously assigned to him, & whether that is important or not, it is not so material; the part is performed, & that is all that was expected. But where there is no such privity of design, & where one of the parties is of equal force to the work, & does not ask assistance, it is not the interposing of a slight aid, insignificant perhaps, & not necessary, that will entitle another party to share. The evidence by which such a claim is supported should be clear & consistent, because it lies on those setting up an interest of joint capture to make out their case. The party setting up a claim of joint capture must make out his case, & the burden of proof lies on him. . . . Where no actual assistance is alleged, the presumption of law leans in favour of the actual captor; & where fraud is suggested against him by the party setting up a constructive claim, the original presumption is still further strengthened; inasmuch as the law always presumes against imputed fraud (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

Being in sight generally, & with some few exceptions is sufficient to entitle a party to share as a joint captor (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

With respect to the evidence in cases of this nature, . . . great attention will always be paid to the preparatory examinations of persons on the spot, the crew of the captured ship, who are disinterested witnesses, examined while the facts are fresh in their memory, before any disputes have arisen, & before they have had time to embark, either their passions or their interests in the suit (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

One witness, is brought forward, from the ship, in whose favour the claim of joint capture is given; & although he has released his interest, it must not be forgotten, that such witnesses usually see with sharp eyes, & recollect with prompt memories in favour of their own ship. . . . There is no case in which the cts. have decided in favour of a joint captor on such evidence alone (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ROBERT (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 194; 165 E. R. 433.

378. —.—.]—Being in sight at the time, on behalf of a King's ship, alone is generally sufficient to found a claim of joint capture, & to raise a legal presumption of the animus persequendi, which is not so readily attributed to private ships of war. . . . As to King's ships, the presumption may be repelled by contrary circumstances, tending to show that there was either no knowledge of the capture that was going on, or no intention to partake in it; in fact, that there was no active or constructive assistance. . . . The act of steering a contrary course would have the effect of repelling the force of any inference raised on the mere presumption of law; . . . & also if a King's ship was lying in harbour, utterly ignorant of the occurrence, with her men dispersed & sails unset (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE DRIE GEBROEDERS (1804), 5 Ch. Why then, what was the Emerald doing at this time? I think cruising merely in search. . . . The flotilla advanced up the Tigris, & fought & captured several armed Turkish vessels. The British cavalry were also advancing, but had been held up by a strong Turkish rearguard, & were some miles away & out of reach of the flotilla when the captures were made. On a motion by the officers & crew of the flotilla for prize bounty under the Order in Council of Mar. 2, 1915, whereby, pursuant to the provisions of Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42, a sum calculated at the rate of £5 for each person on board the enemy's ship at the beginning of the engagement was distributable among such of the officers & crews of any of His Majesty's ships of war as were actually present at the taking or destroying of any armed ship of the enemy, it was objected that the captures were the result of a joint naval & military operation, & therefore outside the provisions of Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25):—Held: the question was not whether on the date in question the flotilla & the troops were engaged in a joint scheme of operations, but whether they were jointly engaged in the capture of the Turkish vessels; the troops in fact took no part in the capture; & the officers & crews of the flotilla were entitled to bounty.—Re MESOPOTAMIA OPERATIONS, 1917, THE SULMAN PAK, ETC., [1922] P. 73; 91 L. 413. General rule.—The Scorpion sailed from Cuxhaven, Oct. 2, 1798, in company with the sloop of war the Fairy & the brig the Kite, having eleven merchantmen under their convoy: on Oct. 24, at daylight, they discovered two sail on the weather bow, which turned out to be the Serius & the enemy's ship afterwards captured ahead of her; the Scorpion & the Kite, two of the convoying ships, were immediately despatched to examine; they sailed on till they came within seven miles of the Serius, the Dutch ship being at that time about two miles ahead of her, the Scorpion made the usual signal to the Serius, & received an answer so as to know her to be the Serius, but no signal was made that the ships ahead were enemies, they were therefore concluded to be friends; & accordingly such a signal being made to the Kite & Fairy, the Fairy immediately made a signal to recall the Scorpion. . . . On these facts I am of the opinion that the acts of these vessels are not to be considered as a desertion of the convoy . . . their discontinuance of the chase & alteration of the course is not an act of their own, but an act wrongfully occasioned by the neglect or mistake, or wilful omission on the part of the Serius, & being so, it would not have the effect which generally would follow upon a discontinuance of chase & alteration of course, before the act of capture took place, for generally a discontinuance & alteration would defeat the interest of a joint captor by destroying the presumption of assistance or intimidation. . . . They must prove that it was the duty of the captain, according to the practice of the Navy to have made the signal of an enemy in sight; & they must also prove that the intimidation on the Dutch was produced from their appearance . . . & that the capture was made within such a distance as would not totally have removed them from the fair limits of their convoy duty (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WAAK-SAMHEID (1799), 3 Ch. There would be no freight dependent on it & therefore the same precise penalty cannot . . . be applied. 440. — Duress no excuse.]—Ship lost in the possession of the captors, by accident & stress of weather, after capture, on the ship's egress from Alexandria, after having served as a transport in conveying the French forces to Egypt. Seizure justifiable. Captors not deemed responsible.

On his [the master's] arrival at Alexandria he applied for payment, & for his discharge, but was put off. . . It is now, however, said that this was an act under duress, & that it is a bygone transaction . . . a man cannot be permitted to aver, that he was an involuntary agent in such a transaction (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

She [The Carolina] was remaining under the power of the French military commander as much as ever. She had solicited leave to depart, but could not obtain it; & if the English fleet had not appeared, she might have been employed to carry on the dragoons to some other place, in the same manner as she had been employed before. I can by no means accede to the description given in argument, or consider her as having removed herself from all taint, arising out of the preceding contract (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

It is said the captors were in fault, for not proceeding immediately to adjudication. It must be conceded, I think, as a reasonable distinction, that commanders acting in the management of great expeditions, cannot be tied down exactly to the same rules, by which individual cruisers are directed to proceed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CAROLINA (1802), 4 Ch. 442. — Number immaterial.]—Neutral ship, chartered to carry out officer in the military service of the enemy. Number immaterial, etc. Condemned.

A vessel hired by the enemy for the conveyance of military persons is to be considered as a transport subject to condemnation. . . The number of military persons that shall constitute such a case, it may be difficult to define . . . number alone is an insignificant circumstance in the considerations, on which the principle of law on this subject is built . . . it appears to me, on principle, to be but reasonable that, whenever, it is of sufficient importance to the enemy, that such persons should be sent out on the public service, at the public expense, it should afford equal ground of forfeiture against the vessel, that may be let out for a purpose so intimately connected with the hostile operations (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

It has been argued, that the master was ignorant of the character of the service on which he was engaged, & that in order to support the penalty it would be necessary that there should be some proof of delinquency in him, or his owner. But I conceive, that is not necessary; it will be sufficient if there is any injury arising to the belligerent from the employment in which the vessel is found. . . In cases of bonâ fide ignorance, there may be no actual delinquency, but if the service is injurious, that will be sufficient to give the belligerent a right to prevent the thing from being done, or at least repeated, by enforcing the penalty of confiscation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE OROZEMBO (1807), 6 Ch. This is a case of a vessel letting herself out in a distinct manner, under a contract with the enemy's govt., to convey a number of persons described as being in the service of the enemy, with their military character travelling with them, & to restore them to their own country in that character. I do . . . pronounce this to be a case of a ship engaged in a course of trade, which cannot be considered to be permitted to neutral vessels, & without hesitation pronounce this vessel subject to condemnation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FRIENDSHIP (1807), 6 Ch. This ship was taken on a voyage from New York to Bourdeaux, with several passengers on board, some of whom are described by the master as French refugees from the island of St. Domingo. On what ground he describes them to be refugees does not at all appear. . . Some of them it is true are women & children, but the others may be persons of the most obnoxious character; they may form a part of the military establishment of the enemy or be employed upon other services most injurious to the interests of this country (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE DRUMMOND (1811), 1 Dods. 103; 165 E. The carrying of despatches of the enemy from the colonies to the mother country is a criminal interposition in the war that will lead to condemnation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) [Despatches] are all official communications of official persons, on the public affairs of the govt. The comparative importance of the particular papers is immaterial . . . & is sufficient, that they relate to the public business of the enemy, be it great or small. It is the right of the belligerent to intercept & cut off all communication between the enemy & his settlements, & to the utmost of his power, to harass & disturb this connection, which it is one of the declared objects of the ambition of the enemy to preserve . . . the true criterion will be, is it on the public business of the state, & passing between public persons for the public service. . . . 483. — Towards owners of property seized—Governed by international not municipal law.]—(1) Seizure as prize are made by executive officers of the Crown; their duties towards the owners of the property seized fall to be determined by international law, not by the municipal law which governs their duties towards the Crown. There is no accepted rule of international law as to the officer in whose custody prizes should be placed when brought into a convenient port.

Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 16, provides that "every ship taken as prize, & brought into port within the jurisdiction of a prize ct. shall forthwith & without bulk broken, be delivered up to the marshal of the ct.; if there is no such marshal . . . to the principal officer of customs of the port."

A German ship carrying copra, which belonged to British subjects & had been shipped before the war, was captured in the Red Sea, & on Aug. 20, 1914, was taken into Alexandria. At the time Egypt was in British occupation, but no prize ct. had been there established; the nearest place at which a prize ct. was then sitting was Gibraltar. There being at Alexandria no marshal nor any British customs officer, the captor delivered the ship & cargo to a detaining officer who had been appointed by the British military authorities to take custody of prizes. That officer, in consequence of representations by the master of the ship that the copra was liable to deteriorate & other circumstances, without proceedings in prize having been instituted, caused the copra to be unloaded & placed in a warehouse, where it was partially destroyed by fire without negligence. The copra, so far as it was undestroyed, was released to the owners, & they subsequently claimed & were decreed damages against the captor & the detaining officer:—Held: neither the captor nor the detaining officer was liable, because (a) as to the captor, Alexandria was a convenient port, & the captor was justified in delivering the ship & cargo to the detaining officer, who did not receive it as the captor's agent; (b) under the circumstances a prize ct. if applied to would have ordered the copra to be unloaded, & consequently the damage was not the result of not making an application; & further, the damages were too remote, there being no contract of bailment.

(2) There is no obligation on the part of the Crown or its executive officers, or the Prize Ct. marshal, to effect insurances against fire for the benefit of cargo owners (LORD PARKER).—THE SÜDMARK (No. 2), [1918] A. CONCORDIA (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 102; 165 E. R. 253.

486. — To whom attaching—Actual wrongdoer.]—(1) The actual wrongdoer is the only person responsible in the Ct. of Admty. for injuries of seizure; a suit was dismissed against the admiral of the station being not privy to the fact.

I do not say that the Statute of Limitations extends to prize causes. . . . I must notice . . . an entire novelty in a prize cause, viz. that it is a proceeding for calling to adjudication, not the immediate alleged wrongdoer, but a person who was neither present at nor cognisant of the transaction, & who is to be affected in responsibility merely on this ground, that the person alleged to have done the injury was acting under his general authority. . . .

The actual wrongdoer is the man to answer in judgment; to him responsibility is attached in this ct. He may have other persons responsible over to him, & that responsibility may be enforced. . . . If a captain made a wrong seizure, under the express orders of an admiral, that admiral may be made answerable in the damages occasioned to the captain by that improper act. But it is the constant practice of this ct. to have the actual wrongdoer held the party before the ct., & every man must see the propriety of that practice; because if the ct. was once to open the door to complaints founded on a remote & consequential responsibility, there would be no end. If a monition is to go against the admiral, for not issuing his revocatory orders, a monition, in like manner, might go against the Lords of the Admty., for a similar neglect; or against the Secretary of State, for not issuing similar directions to the Lords of the Admty.; & these persons might be made parties in a prize cause, & called upon to proceed to adjudication. . . .

(2) If an act of mischief was done by the King's officers, through ignorance, in a place where no act of hostility ought to have been exercised, it does not necessarily follow that mere ignorance of that fact would protect the officers from civil responsibility. If by arts., a place or district was put under the King's peace, & an act of hostility was afterwards committed therein, the injured party might have a right to resort to a ct. of prize, to show that he had been injured by this breach of the peace, & was entitled to compensation; & if the officer acted through ignorance, his own govt. must protect him. It is the duty of govts., if they put a certain district within the King's peace, to take care that due notice shall be given to those persons by whose conduct that peace is to be maintained; & if no such notice has been given, nor due diligence used to give it, & a breach of the peace is committed through the ignorance of those persons, they are to be borne harmless, at the expense of that govt. whose duty it was to have given that notice (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MENTOR (1799), 1 Ch. ## SECT. 2.—RIGHT TO VISIT AND SEARCH.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

495. Right incontestible—To lawfully commissioned cruisers of belligerent nation.—(1) A vessel sailing under convoy of an armed ship for the purpose of resisting visitation & search condemned.

(2) In forming that judgment, I trust that it has not escaped my anxious recollection for one moment, what it is that the duty of my station calls for from me; namely, to consider myself as stationed here not to deliver occasional & shifting opinions to serve present purposes of particular national interest, but to administer with indifference that justice which the law of nations holds out, without distinction, to independent states, some happening to be neutral & some to be belligerent. . . . It is the duty of the person who sits here to determine this question exactly as he would determine the same question if sitting at Stockholm; to assert no pretensions on the part of Great Britain, which he would not allow to Sweden in the same circumstances & to impose no duties on Sweden, as a neutral country, which he would not admit to belong to Great Britain in the same character (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) The right of visiting & searching merchant ships upon the high seas, whatever be the ships, whatever be the cargoes, whatever be the destinations, is an incontestible right of the lawfully commissioned cruisers of a belligerent nation. I say, be the ships, the cargoes, & the destinations, what they may, because till the ships are visited & searched, it does not appear what the ships, or the cargoes, or the destinations are; & it is for the purpose of ascertaining these points that the necessity of this right of visitation & search exists. . . . A lawful force cannot lawfully be resisted (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(4) The authority of the sovereign of the neutral country being interposed in any manner of mere force cannot legally vary the rights of a lawfully commissioned belligerent cruiser (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(5) The only remaining question which I have to consider is, the matter of expenses; & this I think myself bound to dispose of with as much tenderness as I can use in favour of individuals. . . . The captors have been extremely tardy in proceeding to adjudication. Attending to all these considerations, I think claimants are clearly entitled to have their expenses charged upon the value of the property up to the time of the order for further proof. From that time the property might have been withdrawn upon bail, & it is no answer to the ct. to say that this gentleman or another gentleman did not think it advisable to commit their private fortunes in the extent of the security required (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARIA (1799), 1 Ch. (2) Upon the question whether the right of search exists in time of peace . . . two principles of public law are generally recognised as fundamental. One is the perfect equality & entire independence of all distinct states. Relative magnitude creates no distinction of right; relative imbecility, whether permanent or casual, gives no additional right to the more powerful neighbour; & any advantage seized upon that ground is mere usurpation. . . . The second is, that all nations being equal, all have an equal right to the uninterrupted use of the unappropriated parts of the ocean for their navigation. . . . I can find no authority that gives the right of interruption to the navigation of states in amity upon the high seas, excepting that which the rights of war give to both belligerents against neutrals (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—LE LOUIS (1817), 2 Dods. 210; 165 E. account of any suspicion with regard to the cargoes, but because neither ship had the document, known as a green clearance, given to ships which started from a British port on a voyage to a port affording access to enemy territory, or which when on such a voyage wherever commenced had called at a British port for the examination of her cargo in order to comply with the Order in Council of Feb. 16, 1917, the second Reprisals Order. While the ships were proceeding to Kirkwall, which involved passing through an area more dangerous from German submarines than the course which it was intended to take, they were attacked by a German submarine; one ship was sunk & the other damaged. The owners of the ships & cargoes brought actions in the Prize Ct. against the Procurator-General to recover damages:—Held: the Order in Council did not apply to a ship which started from a British or Allied port, & the owners were entitled to recover damages although the order to proceed to Kirkwall was given under an honest mistake as to the effect of the Order in Council.—THE BERNISSE, THE ELVE, [1921] 1 A. Whilst the ship is at sea, he may deliberate, & after mature investigation discharge himself of the custody. He may remain liable for misconduct in having detained at sea, but the obligation to proceed, in the direct question of Prize, is not so imperative upon him, as in a case where the vessel is actually brought in. If any inconvenience is to be apprehended from delay, that will be sufficiently counteracted by the opportunity which the other party has of instituting proceedings, & of calling upon the captor to compensate for the detention, under another form than that of a Prize Proceeding (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SUSANNA (1805), 6 Ch. #### SUB-SECT. 2.—DESPATCH OF VESSEL TO CONVENIENT PORT.

A. In General.

526. Duty to send to convenient port—Latitude allowed in performance of duty—Privateer & war-ship distinguished.]—(1) The capture was made in latitude 42, considerably to the north of Lisbon, the wind being then fair for England. It was their duty to have brought the prize directly to England; for if the public instructions give to captors the power of coming to the most convenient ports, they do not give them a mild & arbitrary discretion, but a discretion to be soundly exercised, on a due consideration of their own convenience, & of the interest of the neutral persons that may be concerned. . . . I feel it impossible not to pronounce, that the privateer has acted improperly, in carrying the vessel into Lisbon, & keeping her there so long. I do not say that the original seizure was wrongful, or that the privateer would not have acted with perfect correctness, if she had brought the ship to England, & instituted proceedings here. The captors not having done that, but having carried her to Lisbon, & detained her there unnecessarily for such a length of time, I am of opinion, that they are liable to costs & damages; deducting the expenses, which would have been incurred, by proceeding here, & also so much time as would have been necessary for that purpose (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) It is the duty of privateers to bring their prizes home to a port of this kingdom as soon as they can. King's ships may reasonably be allowed a greater latitude, as being frequently attached to stations which they cannot leave (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) To sail & chase under false colours may be an allowable stratagem of war, but firing under false colours is what the maritime law of this country does not permit; for . . . it may occasion the loss of the lives of persons who, if they were apprised of the real character of the cruiser, might, instead of resisting, implore protection (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE PEACOCK (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 185; 105 E. R. 579.

527. — Limitation to convenient port.]—This ship was seized on a voyage from Amsterdam to Archangel, under a suspicion of Dutch property. She was going in ballast to bring a cargo to Amsterdam, & appears to have been very much in the habit of Dutch trade, particularly during the war. On these & other grounds, it could not be fairly denied that there were circumstances to justify the seizure; but the second act of sending the vessel to such a place as Shetland is not so defensible. The Prize Act undoubtedly gives the captor some latitude on this subject; he is directed generally "to send his prize to some convenient port." Shetland cannot be considered in any manner as such a port. It is a place where the captor cannot get advice; much less can the claimant learn in what manner to proceed, or where to resort for justice. The captor is certainly not justified under the Prize Act to select any port that he pleases. It must be a convenient port, & in that consideration the convenience of claimant, in proceeding to adjudication, is among one of the first things to which the attention of the captor ought to be addressed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

To release a vessel . . . without her consent, after she was once brought in, would be contrary to the directions of the Prize Act. . . . I shall allow one month's demurrage, & the expenses of the present hearing (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WILHELMSBERG (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 143; 105 E. R. 727.

528. — As soon as possible.]—CREMIDI v. POWELL, THE GERASIMO, No. 71, ante.

529. Liability for breach of duty—Costs & damages.]—This is a question of damage sustained by a vessel coming from Monte Video to London, with a large cargo, documented generally as belonging to persons in America, but of which a considerable part has been claimed for merchants in London. The vessel had sailed from the colony of the enemy after hostilities. Considering the general circumstances of the case, & that the property did not clearly appear . . . the captors were justified in the act of seizure, & it was not an unreasonable curiosity, on their part, to bring the question of property to judicial investigation, & to take the benefit of any question of law that might arise out of the facts. . . . The first duty of captors . . . is to bring their prize "to some convenient port." Convenient is a large & general term, leaving a certain latitude of discretion, but a discretion to be cautiously exercised . . . Conveniences are of different kinds. . . . Among the most important must be considered that of bringing a vessel to a port where she may lie in safety, since that cannot unquestionably be deemed a convenient port, which does not afford security & protection to the property that is brought in. An open road, for instance, where the ship may be occasionally exposed to the weather, cannot be a place of security. It is therefore quite impossible that it should be considered as a convenient port for the preservation of property. Another material ingredient of convenience is that the port shall be of sufficient capacity to admit vessels to enter without unloading their cargoes, since it is the intention of the legislature that bulk shall not be broken. If there is not depth of water to allow vessels to lie without taking out the cargo, non erit his locus; since captors are not to meddle with the cargo in any manner, without the authority of the Ct., which cannot be exercised until the vessel has been brought into port. It is also highly desirable that the port should be a place which holds ready communication with the tribunals which have to decide on questions arising out of the capture; that the parties may have access to advice, & may be enabled to obtain the necessary information; & that the directions of the Ct. of Admlty. be carried into effect with despatch. On the other hand, there may be conveniences of a subordinate nature, in favour of the captor . . . for instance, that owners of privateers may elect their own port, is but a reasonable advantage in itself, when kept within proper limits. . . . The privilege of electing their own ports is a convenience which may be allowed cæteris paribus (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WASHINGTON (1806), 6 Ch. Rob. 275 ; 165 E. R. 930.

B. What Constitutes Convenient Port.

535. Port of captors — Privateer.]—(1) The question is, whether military salvage is due, as for a rescue from the enemy. No case has been cited, & I know of none, in which military salvage has been given, where the property rescued was not in the possession of the enemy, or so nearly as to be certainly & inevitably under his grasp. . . . But in this case there was no enemy to encounter. The danger to the parties was contingent only, & though probable to occur had not actually occurred (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) If a capture is made with an intention of prize, & the ship turns out to belong to a friend, there is no reason why the original but mistaken intention of the captor should defeat any salvage interest, that might arise from other circumstances in the case (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) The next question is, whether the claim is defeated by bringing the vessel so much out of her way. . . . The ct. cannot forget, that at the time of the capture, the ship was actually going into a Spanish port, without any apparent excuse for so doing, & without sufficient documents of property on board. The captors had a right to bring her in as a prize. In this point of view, the bringing into Jersey, the port of the privateer, & as such, the most convenient port to the captors, was not improper. If this does not defeat the right, the ct. has only to consider what is the nature of the service performed. It is that of sending on board a number of men, & bringing the vessel & cargo safe into port. This . . . is no more than an act of humanity, so are all services of salvage acts of humanity ; but still they are such as the policy of the law considers as entitled to reward (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FRANKLIN (1801), 4 Ch. 547. ———.]—Claim admitted on behalf of the Danish Govt. for Algerine property taken under the Danish flag, the Dey having exacted payment from the Danish consul.

It is . . . the duty of captors, in all cases, to carry their prizes to places where they can be put into a course of legal inquiry ; but in captures made on the property of Oriental subjects, a more than ordinary caution, & regularity of proceeding, should be observed, because it is very much the practice of those countries, under a law of nations now peculiar to themselves, to resort immediately to a very summary justice, & to redress themselves for what they consider as an unjust capture, by demanding compensation from the countrymen of the aggressors.

The cargo consisted of corn, sugar, & cotton, laden at Algiers on board a Danish ship, & destined ostensibly to Leghorn, but . . . really to Marseilles. Immediately on hearing of the capture, the Dey of Algiers sent for the Danish consul, & with an emphasis which the Danish consul did not think it prudent to resist, demanded of him to refund the value of the cargo taken on board the Danish ship ; alleging that the Danish flag ought to have protected the cargo, & that if it did not, the Danish Govt. & its public agents, were answerable ; the Danish agent paid the money under this demand, & on a representation of all the circumstances to the Danish Govt., they reimbursed him ; & the application now made is, that the Danish Govt. may be permitted to claim in the place of the original proprietors. . . . If subjects of a neutral country submit to any flagrant act of violence, as for instance, if the Dey of Algiers should step forward to claim a cargo, evidently French, & they submit to refund the value of the property, I should certainly not permit their acquiescence to defeat the right which a British captor had gained in such a cargo. But in a doubtful case, the ct. would incline to support an act done for the prevention of mischief, & although the transaction might not be strictly correct, if it appeared to have a solid foundation of justice at the bottom, the ct. would be strongly inclined to uphold it in its full extent (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE KINDERS KINDER (1799), 2 Ch. What would constitute the return voyage will depend upon all the circumstances of the particular case. If, however, the intention & voyage are definitely abandoned before seizure the offence is dissipated & purged & the vessel is no longer liable to confiscation.

The Alwina, a Dutch steamship, sailed from Newport, Mon., with a cargo of Welsh steam coal, ostensibly consigned to consignees in the River Plate, but really intended for the use of German warships in the South Atlantic. She called at Teneriffe for bunkers, & there, after a stay of several weeks, her cargo of coal was sold to a firm of British merchants. 562. Capture under Reprisals Order—Claimants with knowledge of order.]—A quantity of goods were seized under the Reprisals Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915, from the parcels mail of a neutral vessel bound from Copenhagen to New York, & decrees were made that the goods were of enemy origin & were enemy property & they, or their proceeds if sold, were ordered to be detained until the conclusion of peace or further order.

Various claimants, American citizens, who had submitted to these orders either without entering appearances or without objection at the hearing, claimed that, peace having been concluded, they were entitled to the release of the goods or their proceeds; & they filed evidence to show that according to the law applicable to mercantile transactions in time of peace, though not under the rules of international law applicable to the passing of property in goods forwarded by sea in time of war, the goods at the time of seizure were the property of respective claimants. The A.-G. thereupon waived the rights of the Crown in respect of the declarations of enemy ownership

& consented to orders for release, but claimed that any order for release should be conditional upon payment by claimants of the expenses of detention & the premiums paid for the insurance of the goods:—Held: (1) the seizures & detention being consequent upon shipments presumably made with knowledge of the Order in Council & of the measures directed to be taken thereunder, the releases ought to be subject to the terms that the expenses properly & necessarily incurred in the discharge, detention, & sale of the goods should be borne by claimants; (2) the marshal being charged with the safe keeping of the goods for the sole purpose of eventual restitution, insurance was a necessary precaution in the interests of the owners of the goods, & not in the interests of the Crown as in the case of goods seized & claimed to be subject to condemnation as prize, & accordingly the cost of the insurance must likewise be borne by claimants.—THE UNITED STATES, [1920] P. 430; 3 P. For these two things every captor is answerable; but if an accident, or mere casualty happens, against which no fair exertions of human diligence could protect, it must fall on the party to whom the property is ultimately adjudged. If to secure himself against the negligence of his own agents, or to secure his own responsibility, the captor chooses to make insurance, the practice of the registrar & merchants has been not to allow it in their report. . . . Claimant is not bound to look further, nor to contribute to the expense which the captor, for his own security, may choose to incur. . . . depositions of the master, & of the mate, expressed the fullest belief of property. But the captors have picked up a Jew passenger, on whose evidence alone it is attempted to discredit this claim. These depositions seem, on the face of them, to have been strangely taken; without them, the case would have been perfectly clear. It being a case of a voyage from St. Thomas to Altona, both neutral ports, without any doubt on the destination, & without any sufficient ground of seizure, claimants are entitled to costs & damages (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TRITON (1801), 4 Ch. The ct. has decreed the restitution of the ship, & parts of a valuable cargo. The captors have pleaded in discharge of that decree, "that the vessel was lost at sea without any fault or misconduct on their part." It lies on them to establish that fact, & if it is not proved, the responsibility will fall upon the owners, though they were not present, or personally concerned in the transaction. You will have to judge on the facts submitted to you, whether there was any misconduct or not. From your local knowledge of the island, & of the navigation of that part, you will be enabled to form a more correct judgment, whether the prize master was guilty of any neglect of duty, fairly chargeable upon him, in omitting to take a pilot, & more especially, whether he was justified in not acceding to the request made by the master of the vessel, that he would take a pilot? Should you be of opinion that he was justified in not taking a pilot, you will then consider whether, in proceeding in the course described, up to that particular point, he made proper allowance, as a pilot or person prudently conducting the navigation of the vessel, so as to avoid, on one side, the sunken rock, which he was bound to know, & the other side, to guard against the danger of being carried out by the current, which he seems to have apprehended (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WILLIAM (1806), 6 Ch. The ct. must learn the place of capture from the papers & depositions, but, except in a very glaring case indeed, would hesitate to infer from that place an intended breach of blockade without the aid of Trinity Masters.—THE FORTUNA (1855), Spinks, 307; 2 Jur. (b) What Amounts to Probable Cause.

586. Circumstances of each case considered—No general definition.—A neutral ship was captured in the Gulf of Finland by one of Her Majesty's ships of war, for breach of the blockade of Cronstadt, when no such blockade existed, & sent to England for adjudication as a prize:—Held: the owners of such ship & cargo were entitled to restitution, with costs & damages, as the seizure was made without probable or reasonable cause.

(1) Restitution of a ship seized as a prize may be attended, according to the circumstances of the case, with any one of the following consequences: (a) Claimants may be ordered to pay to the captors their costs & expenses. (b) The restitution may be simple restitution, without costs, or expenses, or damages, to either party, or (c) the captors may be ordered to pay costs & damages to claimant.

(2) Costs & damages, when decreed against the captors, are not inflicted as a punishment on the captors, but as affording compensation to the injured party.

(3) In order to exempt captors from costs & damages in case of restitution, there must be some circumstances connected with the ship or cargo affording reasonable ground for belief that the ship or cargo might prove a lawful prize.

(4) What amounts to such a probable cause as to justify a capture incapable of definition, & is to be regulated by the peculiar circumstances of each case.

(5) It is not necessary to prove vexatious conduct on the part of the captors to subject them to condemnation in costs & damages.

(6) Neither will honest mistake, though occasioned by an act of govt., relieve the captors from liability to compensate a neutral for damage which the captors by their conduct have caused the neutral to sustain.

(7) In order to justify a condemnation for breach of blockade, three things must be proved: the existence of an actual blockade; the knowledge of the party; some act of violation either by going in or coming out with a cargo laden after the commencement of the blockade.

(8) A ship may, by her own misconduct, have occasioned her capture, & in such a case it is very reasonable that she should indemnify the captors against the expenses which her conduct has occasioned (per CUR.).

(9) She may be involved, with little or no fault on her part, in such suspicion as to make the right, or even the duty, of a belligerent to seize her. There may be no fault either in the captor or the captured or both may be in fault, & in such cases there may be damnum absque injuria, & no ground for anything but simple restitution (per CUR.).—SCHACHT v. Measure of compensation—Materiality of motive for destruction.]—The natural rule is, that if a party be unjustly deprived of his property he ought to be put as nearly as possible in the same state as he was before the deprivation took place; technically speaking, he is entitled to restitution, with costs & damages. That is the general rule upon the subject, but like all other general rules it must be subject to modification. If, for instance, any circumstances appear which show that the suffering party has himself furnished occasion for the capture, if he has by his own conduct in some degree contributed to the loss, then he is entitled to a somewhat less degree of compensation, to what is technically called simple restitution. . . . crew, from the hands of a lawful cruiser, cause of condemnation.

If neutral crews may be allowed to resort to violence to withdraw themselves out of the possession taken by a lawful cruiser, for the purpose of a legal inquiry, & may, as it has been termed, hustle them out of the command of the vessel, the whole business of the detention of neutral ships will become a scene of mutual hostility & contention; the crews of neutral ships must be guarded with all the severity & strictness practised upon actual prisoners of war, for the same measures of precaution & distrust will become equally necessary; the intercourse of nations neutral & friendly towards each other will be embittered by acts of hostility mutually committed by their subjects. . . . It is the duty of the cruiser to treat the crew of an apparently neutral ship which he takes possession of for further inquiry into the real character of herself & her cargo with all reasonable indulgence; & it is the duty of neutrals under that possession to take care that they do not put themselves in the condition of enemies, by resorting to such conduct as can be justified only by the character of enemies (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE DISPATCH (1801), 3 Ch. If a neutral master attempts a rescue he violates a duty which is imposed upon him by the law of nations, to submit to come in for inquiry, as to the property of the ship or cargo; & if he violates that obligation by a recurrence to force, the consequence will undoubtedly reach the property of his owner & extends also to the confiscation of the whole cargo entrusted to his care, & thus fraudulently attempted to be withdrawn from the rights of war. With an enemy master, the case is very different; for no duty is violated by such an act on his part (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CATHARINA ELIZABETH (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 232; 165 E. R. 759.

632. Definition & object of.]—THE FREDERICK MOLKE, No. 710, post.

633. ———.]—THE VROUW JUDITH, No. 648, post.

634. ———.]—(1) A commander going out to a distant station may reasonably be supposed to carry with him such a portion of sovereign authority delegated to him as may be necessary to provide for the exigencies of the service on which he is employed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) All that is necessary to make a notification effectual & valid is that it shall be communicated in a credible manner. . . . The usual mode of communicating such intelligence undoubtedly is, not to the hostile govt., but to neutral states . . . here it was not practicable. Sir Home Popham took the only method that could be adopted, by sending to the governor of the place, & by desiring him to make it known to the subjects of neutral powers, who had no public agents or consuls resident there, to whom it could be more formally addressed (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) It is then said, that there are other circumstances that will defeat the operation of the penalty, namely, that the blockade was irregularly maintained by the blockading force, in suffering some ships to go in, & others to come out, which would tend to deceive other persons, & would therefore vitiate the effect of the notification, & confess, if I was satisfied of the fact that such instances did occur, I should be disposed to admit the conclusion, that such a mode of keeping up, or rather of relaxing the blockade, would altogether destroy the effect of it. For what is a blockade but a uniform universal exclusion of all vessels not privileged by law (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ROLLA (1807), 6 Ch. Rob. 364; 165 E. R. 963.

PART VI. SECT. 1.

632 i. Definition & object of.]—A blockade is not a measure which legally affects the enemy at all: it operates, in point of law, only upon neutrals. Upon them it has a real legal effect. It gives new rights to the blockaders. Without it neutrals might trade in safety to the port.

It is the blockade alone which creates the right of capturing the vessels of neutrals.—THE ORION (1813), Stewart, 497.

SUB-SECT. 4.—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

648. Blockade de facto—Presumption from notoriety—Vessels entering port.]—(1) The act of the master of the vessel binds the owner in respect of the conduct of the ship, as much as if it were committed by the owner himself. There are powers with which the law invests him; & if he abuses his trust, it is a matter to be settled between him & the person who constituted him master; but his act of violation is, as to the penal consequences, to be considered as the act of the owners (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) A blockade is just as much violated by a vessel passing outwards as inwards. A blockade is a sort of circumvallation round a place, by which all foreign connection & correspondence is, as far as human force can effect it, to be entirely cut off. It is intended to suspend the entire commerce of that place, & a neutral is no more at liberty to assist the traffic of exportation than of importation. The utmost that can be allowed to a neutral vessel is, that having already taken on board a cargo before the blockade begins, she may be at liberty to retire with it, but it must be considered as a rule which this ct. means to apply, that a neutral ship departing, can only take away a cargo bond fide purchased & delivered, before the commencement of the blockade, if she afterwards takes on board a cargo, it is a fraudulent act, & a violation of the blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) It is necessary that a blockade should be intimated to neutral merchants in some way or other. It may be notified in a public & solemn manner, by declaration to foreign govts.; it may commence also de facto, by a blockading force giving notice on the spot to those who come from a distance, & who may therefore be ignorant of the fact. Vessels going in are, in that case, entitled to a notice before they can be justly liable to the consequences of breaking a blockade, but I take it to be quite otherwise with vessels coming out of the port which is the object of the blockade; there no notice is necessary, after the blockade has existed de facto for any length of time; the continued fact is itself a sufficient notice. It is impossible for those within to be ignorant of the forcible suspension of their commerce. The notoriety of the thing supersedes the necessity of particular notice to each ship (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROUW JUDITH (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 150; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 86; 165 E. R. 130.

649. ———.]—Then the whole case comes to a question of fact whether there is anything to show that these parties were ignorant of the fact of the blockade, for as the notification was made to their govt., the want of personal information, if proved, might protect them. After a limited time, it lies prima facie on the party to show that he was not apprised of the fact of the blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HURTIGE HANE (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 324; 165 E. R. 480.

I am of opinion that the evidence proves that both the owners & master were cognisant of the fact of blockade, & relied for their protection on there being no notification (DR. LUSHINGTON).

The interior carriage of the articles from Amsterdam to Rotterdam, not within the scope & operation of the blockade.

If the general law is, that egress as well as ingress is prohibited by blockade, the neutral merchant is bound to know it; & if he entertains any doubt he must satisfy himself by applying to the country imposing the blockade, & not to the party who has an interest in breaking it. . . . The legal consequences of a blockade must depend on the means of blockade; & on the actual or possible application of the blockading force. On the land side Amsterdam neither was or could be affected by a blockading naval force. It could be applied only externally. The internal communications of the country were out of its reach, & in no way subject to its operation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE OCEAN (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 297; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 310; 165 E. R. 470.

663. ———.]—Blockade of Holland, not violated by a destination to Antwerp.

Antwerp is no part of Holland; & with respect to the Scheldt, it is not within the Dutch territory, but rather a conterminous river, dividing Holland from the adjacent country; & though by treaties with the Dutch, made in favour of the Dutch, we have considered the Scheldt as shut up, & appropriated to the use of Holland, yet, those treaties being extinguished by our present war with Holland, it is too much to say, that it is at this time to be legally regarded as standing upon that footing, particularly for the purposes of a blockade, which is to act upon the interests of other states who might be no parties to those treaties, even when they did exist. If the govt. had notified in express terms that the blockade was to include the Scheldt, which they might certainly have done, I should have enforced the rule so prescribed; but no signification being made, I do not think myself authorised to hold the Scheldt to be now necessarily included in the blockade of Holland (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FRAU ILISABE (1801), 4 Ch. Rob. 63; 165 E. R. 536.

664. ———.]—Blockade of Amsterdam not violated by shipments to Emden, by inland navigation, with ulterior destination.

A blockade may be of different descriptions. . . . The ct. cannot take upon itself to say that a legal blockade exists where no actual blockade can be applied. In the very notion of a complete blockade, it is included, that the besieging force can apply its power to every point of the blockaded state. If it cannot, it is no blockade of that quarter where its power cannot be brought to bear; & where such a partial blockade is undertaken, it must be presumed that this is no more than what was foreseen by the blockading state, which, nevertheless, thought proper to impose it to the extent in which it was practicable (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE STEET (1801), 4 Ch. Rob. 65; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 348; 165 E. R. 537.

665. ———.]—The blockade of Amsterdam is from the nature of the thing a partial blockade, a blockade by sea; & if the goods were going to Emden, with an ulterior destination by land to Amsterdam, or by an interior canal navigation, it is not a breach of the blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JONGE PIETER (1801), 4 Ch. [(2) Two requisites to a blockade, that ports blockaded be hostile & that the force efficiently maintain it.

[(3) The testimony of a commander-in-chief is the best, & sometimes conclusive evidence, as to the sufficiency of the blockading force.

[(4) The legality of a blockade is not affected by the distance of the blockading force, which may be at any distance convenient for closing the port blockaded.

[(5) A blockading squadron would invalidate the blockade by capriciously permitting ingress or egress, & by an unjustifiable absence from the locality.

[(6) Notice to neutrals of a blockade de facto is indispensably necessary, but whatever brings it credibly to their knowledge is sufficient. Unless the blockade is notorious, individual warning is requisite. Knowledge is presumed from notoriety. Notoriety precludes neutrals from approaching the port on any pretence whatever.

Knowledge of the blockade, & not the mode in which such knowledge was communicated, justifies capture.

But when a squadron is driven off by a superior force, a new course of events arises, which may tend to a very different disposition of the blockading force, & which introduces therefore a very different train of presumptions, in favour of the ordinary freedom of commercial speculations. In such a case the neutral merchant is not bound to foresee or to conjecture that the blockade will be resumed; & therefore if it is to be renewed, it must proceed de novo, by the usual course, & without reference to the former state of facts, which has been so effectually interrupted (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HOFFNUNG (1805), 6 Ch. R. 18.

685. Relaxation in favour of belligerents—To exclusion of neutrals.]—Whatever may be the demerits of a ship, she cannot be condemned for a breach of blockade, unless, at the time when she committed the alleged offence, the port for which she was sailing was legally in a state of blockade, & was known to be so, by the master or owner.

Notice of a blockade must not be more extensive than the blockade itself.

The existence & extent of a blockade may be so generally known that knowledge of it in an individual may be presumed without distinct proof of personal knowledge, & such knowledge may supply the place of a direct communication from a blockading squadron, yet the fact, with notice of which an individual is so to be fixed, must be one which admits of no reasonable doubt.

On Apr. 15, 1854, the commander of the Baltic fleet blockaded, de facto, the coast of Courland but his notice to the British Ministers, including the British Minister at Copenhagen, was of that character, that the impression was, that all the Russian ports in the Baltic were blockaded. The English Govt. also on that date issued an Order in Council, giving permission up to May 15, for Russian vessels to discharge their cargoes from Russian ports in the Baltic & White Sea to their port of destination, even though those ports were in a state of blockade. A similar permission was granted by the French Govt., & the Russian gov't. by a ukase allowed the same indulgence to English & French ships. On May 14, 1854, a neutral vessel, under Danish colours, sailed from Copenhagen for Riga, & was captured off Riga by an English ship of war on the 22nd of that month, for a breach of the blockade of that port:—Held: (1) the vessel was improperly seized, as there was no legal blockade at the time of the seizure; (2) as the Order in Council must be taken to have extended to British & French ships, & as it relaxed the blockade in favour of the belligerents to the exclusion of neutrals, the blockade was illegal; (3) assuming the blockade to be legal, yet the master of the ship must be fixed with personal knowledge of all that was publicly known at Copenhagen on May 14, & as the general notoriety, so far as it existed at that time & place, was, that all the Russian ports in the Baltic were blockaded, which was not the fact, the notice, therefore, of the blockade being more extensive than the blockade itself, it was of no effect against a neutral.

(4) If a partial modified blockade is to be enforced against neutrals, justice seems to require that the modification intended to be introduced should be notified to neutral states, & that they should be fully apprised what acts their subjects may or may not do (per CUR.).

(5) It is clear that the operations of the siege or blockade may be interrupted by any communication of the blockaded or besieged place with foreigners; & LORD STOWELL when he defines a blockade, always speaks of it as the exclusion of the blockaded place from all commerce, whether by egress or ingress (per CUR.).—*NORTHCOTE v. (b) Approach to Blockaded Port.

705. Hovering in neighbourhood of blockaded port.] —The neighbourhood of the blockaded port cannot be considered as the fit locus deliberandi for the master's future plans. . . . His first duty is obvious, fuge litus; that neighbourhood is at all events to be avoided. He is bound, on the first notice, to take himself out of an equivocal situation, & if he obstinately refuses & neglects so to do, the ct. will hold . . . that such a conduct will amount to a breach of the blockade, & subject the vessel to condemnation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE APOLLO (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 287; 165 E. R. 778.

706. Anchoring close to port.] —This is the case of a ship taken on a professed destination to Emden; but the fact is, that she was seized in Ostend Roads. . . . I understand the situation of the vessel to have been at no great distance from that port. . . . The ship was lying within a sand, & within the protection of the batteries, & in a place, . . . where ships of large burden are usually unlivered by lighters, as the more commodious method of delivering their cargoes at Ostend. . . . A ship going there must be considered as in the port of Ostend, since for the purpose of enforcing a blockade, it is not necessary to restrict the meaning of the word port to the limits of the particular local port regulations, which may not extend beyond the pier head. A belligerent is not bound to that restricted sense of the word. If the situation of the vessel is within the protection of the batteries, & in a place which vessels usually frequent for the purpose of unlivery, & from which importation into Ostend can safely be effected, & is not unusually effected, it would not unreasonably be held to be a part of that port. . . . A belligerent is not called upon to admit, that neutral ships can innocently place themselves in a situation, where they may with impunity break the blockade whenever they please. If the belligerent country has a right to impose a blockade, it must be justified in the necessary means of enforcing that right; & if a vessel could, under the pretence of going further, approach cy-près, close up to the blockaded port so as to be enabled to slip in without obstruction, it would be impossible that any blockade could be maintained.

. . . The voyage was originally to Emden. What produced the deviation? The master in his deposition states "that the ship's course was directed towards Emden till Feb. 6, when she spoke a small vessel, which informed them that the Ems was full of ice, which induced him to go to Ostend to get a pilot, as it was necessary . . . that he should be taken into a place of safety." . . . Another witness . . . states "that they went to get a pilot for Flushing." . . . It appears to me to be perfectly unnatural, that he should have made choice of such a port as Flushing. . . . I am of opinion that the ship had been brought into this situation, not with any honest intention, but for the purpose of importing her cargo into Ostend (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NEUTRALITET (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 30; 165 E. R. 839.

707. Approach within protection of shore.]—It has appeared in other cases that the blockading frigates do permit vessels to go within no great distance of the shore, for the purpose of procuring pilots. . . . If it had been a case . . . of situation merely, & that at the distance of about twenty miles from the port of Havre, it would be the duty, & the inclination of the ct., not to infer too rigorously, from that circumstance alone, an intention of violating the blockade. . . . The master says "that the course in which he was steering would have carried him directly to Havre, & that he should have continued in that course, though not into the port of Havre, but that he should have gone close under the land, & have taken a pilot for Caen." . . . It is impossible that any blockade can be maintained if such a practice is allowed, that a vessel, under a destination to a port not interdicted, shall be at liberty to pursue her course in such a manner as must draw the cruiser employed in that service under the range of the enemy's batteries (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE GUTE ERWARTUNG (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 182; 165 E. R. 894.

708. —.]—A person cannot be allowed to approach so near to a blockaded port as to place himself almost within the effectual protection of the shore, & with no necessity existing. To allow such an approach would render the whole purpose of blockade perfectly nugatory (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CHARLOTTE CHRISTINE (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 101; 165 E. R. 864.

B. Outwards Breach.

710. General rule—Sailing constitutes breach.]—

(1) Nothing further is necessary to constitute blockade, than that there should be a force stationed to prevent communication, & a due notice, or prohibition given to the party. It is not an accidental absence of the blockading force, not the circumstance of being blown off by wind, if the suspension, & the reason of the suspension are known, that will be sufficient in law to remove a blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) For what is the object of blockade? not merely to prevent an importation of supplies, but to prevent export as well as import, & to cut off all communication of commerce with the blockaded place. I must therefore consider the act of egress to be as culpable as the act of ingress, & the vessel on her return still liable to seizure & confiscation. There may indeed be cases of innocent egress, where vessels have gone in before the blockade, & in such circumstances it could not be maintained that they might not be at liberty to retire. But even then a question might arise if it was attempted to carry out a cargo, for that would . . . contravene one of the chief purposes of blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) A ship in all cases coming out of a blockaded port is in the first instance liable to seizure; & to obtain release, the claimant will be required to give a very satisfactory proof of the innocence of his intention (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FREDERICK MOLKE (1798), 1 Ch. Rob. 86; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 58; 165 E. R. 106.

711. —.]—(1) A blockade de facto ex pires de facto; but a blockade by notification is prima facie presumed to continue till the notification is revoked; this presumption throws the onus probandi on claimant.

(2) Neutral vessels breaking a blockade are liable to confiscation. . . . A blockade is broken as much by coming out with a cargo as by going in; the only exception . . . is that of a cargo shipped or delivered to the master, for the use of his owner, before the commencement of the blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) There are two sorts of blockade; one by the simple fact only, the other by a notification accompanied with the fact. In the former case, when the fact ceases, otherwise than by accident or the shifting of the wind, there is immediately an end of the blockade; but where the fact is accompanied by a public notification from the govt. of a belligerent country to neutral govts., I apprehend prima facie, the blockade must be supposed to exist till it has been publicly repealed. It is the duty of a belligerent country, which has made the notification of blockade, to notify in the same way, & immediately, the discontinuance of it. To suffer the fact to cease, & to apply the notification again, at a distant time, would be a fraud on neutral nations; & a conduct which the ct. is not to suppose any country would pursue. I do not say that a blockade of this sort may not in any possible case expire de facto, but I say such a conduct is not hastily to be presumed against any nation & therefore till such a case is clearly made out . . . a blockade by notification is, prima facie, to be presumed to continue till the notification is revoked.—THE NEPTUNUS (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 170; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 94; 165 E. R. 137.

Another witness . . . states "that they went to get a pilot for Flushing." . . . It appears to me to be perfectly unnatural, that he should have made choice of such a port as Flushing. . . . I am of opinion that the ship had been brought into this situation, not with any honest intention, but for the purpose of importing her cargo into Ostend (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NEUTRALITET (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 30; 165 E. R. 839.

707. Approach within protection of shore.]—It has appeared in other cases that the blockading frigates do permit vessels to go within no great distance of the shore, for the purpose of procuring pilots. . . . If it had been a case . . . of situation merely, & that at the distance of about twenty miles from the port of Havre, it would be the duty, & the inclination of the ct., not to infer too rigorously, from that circumstance alone, an intention of violating the blockade. . . . The master says "that the course in which he was steering would have carried him directly to Havre, & that he should have continued in that course, though not into the port of Havre, but that he should have gone close under the land, & have taken a pilot for Caen." . . . It is impossible that any blockade can be maintained if such a practice is allowed, that a vessel, under a destination to a port not interdicted, shall be at liberty to pursue her course in such a manner as must draw the cruiser employed in that service under the range of the enemy's batteries (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE GUTE ERWARTUNG (1805), 6 Ch. #### B. Outwards Breach.

710. General rule—Sailing constitutes breach.]—

(1) Nothing further is necessary to constitute blockade, than that there should be a force stationed to prevent communication, & a due notice, or prohibition given to the party. It is not an accidental absence of the blockading force, not the circumstance of being blown off by wind, if the suspension, & the reason of the suspension are known, that will be sufficient in law to remove a blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) For what is the object of blockade? not merely to prevent an importation of supplies, but to prevent export as well as import, & to cut off all communication of commerce with the blockaded place. I must therefore consider the act of egress to be as culpable as the act of ingress, & the vessel on her return still liable to seizure & confiscation. There may indeed be cases of innocent egress, where vessels have gone in before the blockade, & in such circumstances it could not be maintained that they might not be at liberty to retire. But even then a question might arise if it was attempted to carry out a cargo, for that would . . . contravene one of the chief purposes of blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) Neutral vessels breaking a blockade are liable to confiscation. . . . A blockade is broken as much by coming out with a cargo as by going in; the only exception . . . is that of a cargo shipped or delivered to the master, for the use of his owner, before the commencement of the blockade (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(3) There are two sorts of blockade; one by the simple fact only, the other by a notification accompanied with the fact. In the former case, when the fact ceases, otherwise than by accident or the shifting of the wind, there is immediately an end of the blockade; but where the fact is accompanied by a public notification from the govt. of a belligerent country to neutral govts., I apprehend primâ facie, the blockade must be supposed to exist till it has been publicly repealed. It is the duty of a belligerent country, which has made the notification of blockade, to notify in the same way, & immediately, the discontinuance of it. To suffer the fact to cease, & to apply the notification again, at a distant time, would be a fraud on neutral nations; & a conduct which the ct. is not to suppose any country would pursue. I do not say that a blockade of this sort may not in any possible case expire de facto, but I say such a conduct is not hastily to be presumed against any nation & therefore till such a case is clearly made out . . . a blockade by notification is, primâ facie, to be presumed to continue till the notification is revoked.—THE NEPTUNUS (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 170; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 94; 165 E. R. 137.

(3) The interest of prize is vested in the captor, & captors may, against the wish of the Crown, proceed to adjudication (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

But . . . the inquiry should be made at some of the British ports in the channel. It could not be, that ships should be permitted to resort to the ports of the blockaded country. . . . The ports of the blockading country are the proper ports for inquiry (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) It would be a dangerous doctrine to hold, that a master in a state of intoxication might be permitted to go on for the blockaded port, & that the supercargo should lie by, & then come & plead the intoxication of the master, & exculpate himself, by stating a mere intention to dispossess him, & to steer another course. It was the duty of the supercargo, & of the officers concerned in the navigation of the ship, to have dispossessed the master of the command in such critical circumstances (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SHEPHERDESS (1804), 5 Ch. 738. Master obeying enemy shipper.]—The ship appears to have been a Prussian vessel, which had been lying some time in Bourdeaux; & if the matter had rested only on the general notoriety of the blockade at Bourdeaux, at the time, it might have laid a ground for that sort of indulgent consideration, which has been pressed upon the ct. as due to ships lying in the enemy's ports, to which information may be supposed to travel with much uncertainty. . . . The master . . . seems to have acted only under an opinion, that because he had signed the charter-party he was bound to proceed. I conceive the law is not so; but that he would have been justified in refusing to go on. As in all other contracts that become illegal, he might have protested against being any longer bound by his charter-party. Does he apply to his own consul, or to the ct. of justice? He does not appear to have applied for any such redress. If he had, indeed, it could not be held in this ct., that his mere engagement to do an act which had become illegal, however injuriously pressed upon him by the artifices of the enemy shipper, could exonerate him from the penalties consequent upon it. Unless it could be maintained, then, that the ship is justified by the direction of the employer in the enemy's country, I can find no principle on which the vessel can be relieved. Such a position would be altogether untenable (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TUTELA (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 177; 165 E. R. 892.

(2) The presumption is against a vessel captured in entering a blockaded port, & an imperative & overwhelming necessity for so doing must be established by the owner to exempt from condemnation.

(3) It is not competent to owners of a cargo on board a vessel condemned for breach of blockade to save the cargo from condemnation by showing their innocence in the transaction, as the owners of the cargo are concluded by the illegal act of the master, although it was done without the privity of the owners of the cargo, & even if it was done contrary to their wishes.

When a blockade is known, or might have been known, to the owners of the cargo, at the time when the shipment was made, & they might, therefore, by possibility, be privy to an intention of violating the blockade, such privity will be assumed as an irresistible inference of law, & it is not competent to rebut it by evidence, as in cases of blockade, for the purpose of affecting the cargo with the rights of the belligerent; the master is to be treated as the agent for the cargo, as well as for the ship.—*BALTAZZI v. 747. Strict rule of agency not applied.]—(1) A shipment was made between July 9 & 19, the notification of the blockade of Amsterdam having been made on June 11, 1798; the first order that the ct. made was for the production of the letters of orders; because, if it had appeared that they were given after the time, when the notification could by a fair possibility be supposed to have been known to the person giving the orders, he would be bound directly by his own act; or if they were sent previous to the notification, two questions might arise; whether sufficient time had intervened since the notification, to have given him an opportunity of counter-ordering the shipment; for if so, he would be legally answerable for the consequences of his own negligence; or, if sufficient time had not intervened, whether, though personally free from all imputation of offence, the claimant might not be bound by that powerful general principle of law, which holds the employer responsible for the acts of his agent. The date of the order in this instance takes the party out of the first description, because it being given, in Oct. 1797, long before the blockade de facto commenced the parties are entirely exculpated from all offence in this stage of the transaction (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) The abstract rule is undoubtedly just that persons are bound by their agents. . . . The agents of foreign merchants in the enemy's country, that country being under blockade, do not stand in the same situation as other agents. They have not only a distinct, but even an opposite interest from that of their principal, to fulfil the commission at all risks as rapidly as possible, for their own private advantage, & for the public interest of their country, at that time under particular pressure as to the exportation of its produce. This may fairly be allowed to impose a strong obligation on the candour of the ct. not to hold an employer too strictly bound, on mere general principles, by an agent who may be actuated by interests different from those of his principal (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NEPTUNUS (1800), 3 Ch. All the certificate of the British officer says is, "I have permitted this vessel to proceed from Pillau, with her cargo to Colberg." Did he possess any authority to grant such permission, in the very face of an Order in Council? It cannot be. I am very sorry that this conduct in the British officer has had the effect of misleading the master of the vessel, but, at all events, his owners have not been deceived; theirs was the original purpose of sending the vessel to an interdicted port, & from which purpose they had never departed. At the same time it is not without some degree of pain that I condemn this ship & cargo, as proceeding to an interdicted port under an insufficient authority (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE COURIER (1810), Edw. 249; 2 Eng. Pr. Cas. 50; 165 E. R. 1099.

755. — Proof of permission.]—If it is contended, on the part of a neutral vessel, that she is entitled to go to a blockaded port by reason of permission having been given to her by one of the blockading force or one of Her Majesty's cruisers, it is her duty, if she means the et. to place any reliance on such permission, to take care to have the name of the cruiser, that it may be contradicted if not true. A mere statement of there being a cruiser, without any name & without any definite place being stated where she was seen, never can be received. The vessel must be condemned, & I can make no distinction in favour of the cargo because it was purchased in a blockaded port by the supercargo, an agent sent by the owners of the cargo for the purpose (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE NOIRNEN (1855), Spinks, 171; 2 Ecc. & Ad. 169; 164 E. R. 369.

B. Stress of Circumstances.

756. General rule — Absolute & unavoidable necessity.]—It is usual to set up the want of water & provisions as an excuse, & if I was to admit pretences of this sort, a blockade would be nothing more than idle ceremony. . . . I will not say that cases of necessity may not occur that would afford a sufficient justification, & I add that if the party can show that they were under any great necessity I would certainly admit such an excuse. But if they cannot do this, & unless it is proved that in coming up the Channel there was no other port, either English or French, but the interdicted port of Amsterdam into which they could put, I shall reject the apology (per Cur.).—THE HURTIGE HANE (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 124; 165 E. R. 261; subsequent proceedings, 3 Ch. Rob. 324.

757. — —.]—The want of provisions is an excuse which will not on light grounds be received; because an excuse, to be admissible, must show an imperative & overruling compulsion to enter the particular port under blockade which can scarcely be said in any instance of mere want of provisions. It may induce the master to seek a neighbouring port, but it can hardly ever force a person to resort exclusively to the blockaded port. What is stated respecting the wind is of a different nature. . . . This is a fact that may admit of specific evidence, &, therefore, I shall admit affidavits to be offered on that point. . . . Considering the reference that has been made to the particular state of the winds in the present case, . . . I shall admit evidence to be introduced on this point (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FORTUNA (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 27; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 417; 165 E. R. 685.

758. — —.]—In this case the fact is not denied, that the ship was taken in a port which is blockaded, & therefore the whole burden of exonerating himself from the penal consequences lies upon the party. He must show that he was led there by some accident which he could not control, or by some want of information which he could not obtain (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ARTHUR (1810), Edw. 202; 2 Eng. Pr. to answer in costs & damages, for any wrongful exercise of the rights of capture. At the same time it may be a matter of convenience that some declaration should be made; because it is possible, that if the grounds are stated, it may be in the power of the neutral master to give such reasons as may explain away the suspicion that is suggested. It may, therefore be convenient to both parties, but it is not absolutely necessary; it is not a duty incumbent on the captor to state his reasons; much less it is to be argued negatively, that, because no mention is made of the blockade at the time of capture, it does not follow that it must necessarily have been unknown to both the parties. . . . Where a ship has contracted the guilt by sailing with an intention of entering a blockaded port, or by sailing out, the offence is not purged away till the end of the voyage; till that period is completed, it is competent to any cruisers to seize & proceed against her for that offence. . . . A blockade may be more or less rigorous, either for the single purpose of watching the military operations of the enemy, & preventing the egress of their fleet, . . . or on a more extended scale, to cut off all access of neutral vessels to that interdicted place, which is strictly & properly a blockade, for the other is in truth no blockade at all, as far as neutrals are concerned. It is an undoubted right of belligerents to impose such a blockade, though a severe right, & as such, not to be extended by construction; it may operate as a grievance on neutrals, but it is one to which, by the law of nations, they are bound to submit. Being, however, a right of a severe nature, it is not to be aggravated by mere construction. . . .

A temporary & forced secession of the blockading force, from the accidents of winds & storms, is not sufficient to constitute a legal relaxation. . . .

What is a blockade but to prevent access by force. If the ships stationed on the spot to keep up the blockade will not use their force for that purpose, it is impossible for a ct. of justice to say there was a blockade actually existing at that time.

It is in vain for govts. to impose blockades, if those employed on that service will not enforce them (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JUFFROW MARIA SCHROEDER (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 148; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 279; 165 E. R. 417.

Part VII.—Contraband.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

780. Nature of carriage of contraband—Not unlawful.]—It is not an offence against the law of nations, or the law of this country, for the subject of a neutral state to supply contraband of war to a belligerent power; & the right of the other belligerent to seize such contraband of war in transitu is merely a co-existent conflicting right, which exposes the neutral merchant to the risk of confiscation, but does not render illegal a contract between him & another neutral subject for a joint adventure for the supply of such contraband goods.—*Re GRAZEBROOK, Ex p. o. Distinction between absolute & conditional contraband.]—The expression contraband of war has a twofold meaning:—(1) absolute contraband, which includes everything useful for war only; (2) conditional contraband, which includes all things which though useful for both peace & war, become contraband if destined for the purpose of being equally lawful. . . . The rule respecting contraband, is that the articles must be taken in delicto, in the actual prosecution of the voyage to an enemy's port. Under the present understanding of the law of nations, you cannot generally take the proceeds in the return voyage. From the moment of quitting port on a hostile destination, the offence is complete, & it is not necessary to wait till the goods are actually endeavouring to enter the enemy's port; but beyond that, if the goods are not taken in delicto, & in the actual prosecution of such a voyage, the penalty is not now generally held to attach (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE IMINA (1800), 3 Ch. 786. Carriage between ports of same country.—THE EDWARD, No. 801, post.

787. Loss of character of contraband—Port of destination becoming British—Before arrival of goods.—There must be a delictum existing at the moment of seizure to sustain the penalty. It is said that the offence was consummated by the act of sailing & so it might be with respect to the design of the party, & if the seizure had been made whilst the offence continued, the property would have been subject to condemnation. But when the character of the goods is altered & they are no longer to be considered as contraband, going to the port of an enemy, it is not enough to say that they were going under an illegal intention. There may be the mens rea, not accompanied by the act of going to an enemy's port. The same rule does apply to cases of contraband, & upon the same principle in which it has been applied in those of blockade; I am not aware of any cases in which the penalty of contraband has been inflicted on goods not in delicto, except in the recent class of cases respecting the proceeds of contraband carried outward with false papers. But on what principle have those decisions been founded? On this, that the right of capture having been defrauded in the original voyage, the opportunity should be extended to the returned voyage. Here the opportunity has been afforded till the character of the port of destination became British. Till that time the liability attached; after that, though the intention is consummated, there is a material defect in the body & substance of the offence, in the fact, though not in the intent. I am of opinion that it is a discharge, & a complete acquittal that long before the time of seizure these goods had lost their noxious character of going as contraband to an enemy's port (per Cur.).—THE TRENDE SOSTRE (1807), 6 Ch. Rob. 390, n.; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 588; 164 E. R. 973.

788. Cargo declared contraband during voyage.—On Sept. 16, 1914, a neutral Dutch vessel left a neutral Spanish port for a neutral destination, Rotterdam, with a cargo of iron ore shipped by a Spanish firm & consigned to a Dutch firm. On Sept. 19, when off the Isle of Wight, the vessel was stopped by a British warship & sent into a British port for examination. On Sept. 21 iron ore, which had been declared free, was made conditional contraband, &, on Oct. 4, the cargo was seized as prize, on the assumption that it was intended for ultimate delivery to Krupp's in Germany. To discharge the cargo the vessel was sent to Middlesbrough, where she was released:—Held: the cargo could be properly condemned as the seizure took place after iron ore had been declared contraband; but the ship-owners were, in the circumstances, entitled to freight, though not to demurrage, as the temporary detention of a neutral vessel by a belligerent was an unfortunate result of a state of war.—THE KATWIJK, [1916] P. 177; 114 L. They policy contained the clause: "Warranted no contraband of war." While on the insured voyage the vessel was captured by a Japanese cruiser, & was subsequently condemned by a Japanese Prize Ct. for having on board two Russian naval officers who had been received on board as passengers to Vladivostok. The Prize Ct. held that the ship "must be confiscated, as the vessel was actually engaged in transporting contraband persons":—Held: contraband persons were not "contraband of war" within the meaning of the warranty, & defts. were liable on the policy. Semble: the expression "contraband of war" as ordinarily used does not apply to persons, but only to property.—YANGTZE INSURANCE ASSOCN. v. ## SECT. 2.—CONDITIONAL CONTRABAND.

791. Liability to condemnation—Purpose for which intended—Civil or warlike purposes.—Another circumstance to which some indulgence, by the practice of nations, is shown, is, when the articles are in their native & unmanufactured state. Thus iron is treated with indulgence, though anchors & other instruments fabricated out of it are directly contraband. Hemp is more favourably considered than cordage. . . .

The most important distinction is, whether the articles are intended for the ordinary use of life, or even for mercantile ships' use; or whether they are going with a highly probable destination to military use. . . . The nature & quality of the port to which the articles were going is not an irrational test; if the port is a general commercial port, it shall be understood that the articles are going for civil use, although occasionally a frigate or other ships of war may be constructed in that port. Contra, if the great predominant character of a port be that of a port of naval military equipment, it shall be intended that the articles were going for military use, although merchant ships resort to the same place, & although it is possible that the articles might have been applied to civil consumption; for it being impossible to ascertain the final application of an article incipitis usus, it is not an injurious rule which deduces both ways the final use from the immediate destination; & the presumption of hostile use, founded on its destination to a military port, is very much inflamed, if at the time when the articles were going, a considerable armament was notoriously preparing, to which a supply of those articles would be eminently useful (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JONGE MARGARETHA (1799), 1 Ch. 792. ——— Knowledge of owner of confiscable character.]—Conditional contraband goods consigned to an enemy port can properly be condemned whenever the ct. is of opinion that, under all the circumstances brought to its knowledge, they were probably intended to be applied for warlike purposes of the enemy. Knowledge of the confiscable character of the goods on the part of the owner of the ship is sufficient to justify the condemnation of the ship, at any rate, where the goods in question constitute a substantial part of the whole cargo.

In Jan. 1916, the Swedish owners of a ship chartered her to German fish merchants for voyages from Scandinavian to German Baltic ports. The ship was captured on Apr. 4, 1916, while carrying under the charterparty a cargo of salted herrings to Lübeck, a German port. Food-stuffs were declared to be conditional contraband on Aug. 4, 1914. The consignees of the herrings were bound to hand them over to a German co., appointed by the German Govt. for purposes connected with the Govt. control of foodstuffs, that control being rendered necessary by the war & the consequent scarcity of food in Germany:—Held: upon the facts the cargo was confiscable, & the ship was properly condemned since the owners must have known the facts which rendered the cargo liable to condemnation.—THE HAKAN, [1918] A. But as to other timber, generally, the fair criterion will be, the nature of the port to which it is going; if it is going to Brest, the destination may be reasonably held to control & appropriate the dubious quality, & fix upon it the character of ship timber, if to other ports, of a less military nature, though timber of the same species, it may be more favourably regarded. . . . It is the practice of this ct. not to consider, as included within the prohibition, all that a more extended interpretation might justify; it restores spars & balks of ordinary magnitude, unless there is something special in the circumstances attending them, to show that they have a positive destination to naval purposes. . . . With respect to such timber as is in its own nature ambiguous, I am disposed to look to the criterion of the destination as an equitable rule of interpretation, taking a fair course between the rights of exportation of native produce, on the part of the neutral country & the defensive rights of the belligerent (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TWENDE BRODRE (1801), 4 Ch. In the case of a ship carrying such a cargo as tar to one of the great naval arsenals of the enemy, it is not improper to bring in for inquiry as to the fact of property, whether it was going on the private account of the neutral merchant, or under a contract with the govt., by which those arsenals were more usually supplied. . . . The ship was brought in on Mar. 20, the claim was given on Mar. 27, & on Mar. 31 the offer or restitution was made. Since that time, there seems to have been some delay. . . . Cases of this description must be conducted with great tenderness to the neutral interest, & as little time as possible must be lost in deliberation, & some demurrage must be allowed, but not against the captors in this case (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ZACHEMAN (1804), 5 Ch. When the vessel reported at Freetown the British naval authorities received information that the master had approached the crew to ascertain whether they would join him in the barratrous enterprise of taking the ship & cargo to Stettin instead of Amsterdam, her port of discharge. The master had several times stated that he intended to take the ship to Stettin; the crew declined to be parties to the undertaking. The ship & cargo were seized at Freetown, & the Crown claimed their condemnation as prize on the ground that they were bound to an enemy base of supply.—Held: although the master entertained the design of taking the ship & cargo to an enemy port, the ship was still on her authorised voyage when seized at Freetown; as the crew would not support the master he was not in a position to carry the design into execution & it could not be said, therefore, that the destination of the vessel was Stettin. 826. Goods consigned to neutral country—Re-export to enemy country.]—A quantity of dried fruit was shipped on Swedish steamships in United States ports for carriage to a Swedish port. The fruit was afterwards seized by the Crown on board the Swedish vessels under the Reprisals Order on the ground that the goods were contraband & destined ultimately for Germany. The fruit was claimed by the Swedish Victualling Commission:—Held: on the facts, the fruit belonged to the Commission & was bond fide intended for consumption in Sweden, & therefore the claim must be allowed.—THE PACIFIC & THE SAN FRANCISCO (1917), 33 T. 827. ———.]—A neutral vessel sailed from New York in Nov. 1914. Part of her cargo consisted of rubber, which was consigned by claimant, an American citizen, to a Swede at Landsrona. The vessel was captured by a British cruiser. At the hearing in the Prize Ct. evidence was offered by the Crown to the effect that the final destination of the rubber was Germany. The President held that as the doctrine of continuous voyage & transportation, both as regards carriage by sea & land, was part of international law at the time of the commencement of the war in Aug. 1914, all goods which were intended for the use of the German Govt., although nominally having a neutral port as their port of destination, must be condemned as lawful prize. From the order of condemnation claimant appealed:—Held: applt.'s title had not been made out, & the probabilities of the case pointed to the version given at the original hearing being the true one.—THE KIM (1917), 116 L. 828. —Evidence of re-export trade.]—(1) When contraband goods consigned to a neutral port have been seized as prize on the ground that they have an ultimate enemy destination, the existence of an extensive trade by a re-export of similar goods, or products thereof, from the neutral country to an enemy country is of itself such a circumstance of suspicion as disentitles a successful claimant from recovering costs or damages.

829. —Intention of buyer.]—A quantity of cotton goods, absolute contraband shipped by the sellers, a neutral firm in America, on a neutral vessel for carriage to Amsterdam was seized as prize. The consignees were the N. O. T., the Netherlands Oversea Trust co., acting on behalf of the buyers, a Dutch firm. Owing to the seizure the buyers refused payment, & the property in the goods remained in the shippers who were claimants. The case for the Crown was that the buyers sold large quantities of cotton goods to Germany, & that if the goods in question had not been intercepted, they would, if the buyers could have evaded the restrictions of the N. O. T., have been resold to buyers in Germany. No allegations were made by the Crown against claimants that they had any intention that the goods should be sent to Germany:—Held: (1) the question to be decided was what was the destination intended by the persons who would have had control of the goods when they arrived; (2) neither the fact that claimants had no intention of sending the goods to Germany, nor that the N. O. T. would have exacted guarantees of neutral consumption from the buyers, & if they could, would have frustrated the intention of the buyers to send the goods to Germany, prevented the

830. — Material for manufacture into goods —Destined for enemy country.]—A quantity of leather, contraband, consigned to claimants, a firm of boot manufacturers in a neutral country, was seized as prize ex a neutral ship on the ground that it was either destined for the enemy as leather, or was going to claimants' factory to be there made into military boots which were destined for the enemy forces. An application on behalf of the Crown for an order for discovery of claimants' books & documents relating to the sales of leather & boots from the year prior to the outbreak of war down to the date of seizure was resisted, inter alia, on the ground that if the leather was going to be made into boots the doctrine of continuous voyage did not apply, & therefore, whatever the ultimate destination of the boots, the leather could not be seized as prize :—Held : (1) contraband material, imported into a neutral country to be there manufactured into goods destined for the enemy, does not become part of the common stock of the country so as to defeat the doctrine of continuous voyage ; (2) accordingly an order could be made directing the claimants to make discovery of the books & documents relating to their sales of boots as well as of leather from Aug. 1913, down to the date of seizure.—THE BALTO, [1917] P. 79 ; 86 L. 831. — — — — — ]—A quantity of coconut oil, conditional contraband, the property of claimants, a Swedish co. of margarine manufacturers, was seized as prize ex a neutral vessel. The Crown claimed the condemnation of the oil on the ground, inter alia, that assuming it was acquired for the manufacture of margarine, it formed part of the supply of a reservoir of edible fats, part of which went to Germany, or that the margarine manufactured therefrom would, to the knowledge of claimants, be consumed in Sweden in substitution for Swedish butter supplied to Germany :—Held : had it been shown that the oil was imported for the manufacture of margarine to be sent to the enemy, or even that the particular manufacturers of margarine were acting in combination with particular producers of butter, & the intention & object of their combination was to produce margarine in order that the butter might be sent to Germany, he would have held that the oil was subject to condemnation, but it was not in accordance with international law to hold raw material on its way to citizens of a neutral country, to be there manufactured into an article for consumption in that country, was subject to condemnation merely on the ground that the consequences were that another article of a like kind would be exported to the enemy by other citizens of the neutral country.—THE BONNA, [1918] P. 123 ; 87 L. At the date of the seizure the oranges had been declared conditional contraband. It is therefore for applts. to prove that they were not destined for an enemy govt. or an enemy base of supply. The question to be determined is whether they have satisfactorily discharged the burden which rests upon them . . . when an exporter ships goods under such conditions that he does not retain control of their disposal after arrival at the port of delivery, & the control but for their interception & seizure would have passed into the hands of some other persons, who had the intention either to sell them to an enemy govt. or to send them to an enemy base of supply, then the doctrine of continuous voyage becomes applicable, & the goods on capture are liable to condemnation as contraband (LORD PARMOOR).—THE NORNE, [1921] 1 A. Whether importation bona fide—Payment of duty—Cargo landed.]—It is not my business to say what is universally the test of a bona fide importation: It is argued that it would not be sufficient, that the duties should be paid, & that the cargo should be landed. If these criteria are not to be resorted to, I should be at a loss to know what should be the test; & I am strongly disposed to hold, that it would be sufficient, that the goods should be landed & the duties paid (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE POLIX (1800), 2 Ch. 844. — — — — —.]—The cargo was landed & entered at the custom house, & a bond was given for duties to the amount of 1,239 dollars. The cargo was reshipped, & a debenture for 1,211 dollars by way of drawback was obtained. All this passed in the course of a few days. The vessel arrived at Marblehead on May 29; on that day the bond for securing the duties was given. On May 30 & 31 the goods were landed, weighed, & packed. The permit to ship them is dated June 1, & on June 3 the vessel is cleared out as laden, & ready to proceed to sea. We are frequently obliged to collect the purpose from the circumstances of the transaction. The landing thus almost instantaneously followed by the reshipment, has little appearance of having been made with a view to actual importation; but it is not upon inference that the conclusion in this case is left to rest. Claimants instead of showing that they really did import this cargo, have, in their attestation, stated the reasons which determined them not to import it. They say, indeed, that when they ordered it to be purchased "it was with the single view of bringing it to the United States, & that they then had no intention or expectation of exporting it in the schooner to Spain." . . . It can never be contended, that an intention to import once entertained is equivalent to importation. It would be a contradiction in terms to say that by acts done after the original intention has been abandoned, such original intention has been carried into execution. Why should a cargo, which there was to be no attempt to sell in America, have been entered at an American custom house, & voluntarily subjected to the payment of any, even the most trifling duty? Not because importation was, or in such a case could be intended, but because it was thought expedient that something should be done, which in a British prize ct. might pass for importation (SIR WILLIAM GRANT).—THE WILLIAM (1806), 5 Ch. C. Control of Destination of Cargo.

850. Intention of person able to control destination.]—The Declaration of London, 1909, which was not ratified by Great Britain, by Art. 35 purported to abrogate the doctrine of continuous voyage in the case of conditional contraband. An Order in Council of Oct. 29, 1914 (1), by Clause 1 provided that the Declaration of London should be adopted during the present hostilities subject to certain modifications. Modification (iii) provided as follows: "Notwithstanding the provisions of Art. 35 of the said Declaration, conditional contraband shall be liable to capture on board a vessel bound for a neutral port if the goods are consigned "to order," or if the ship's papers do not show who is the consignee of the goods, or if they show a consignee of the goods in territory belonging to, or in the occupation of, the enemy." In Mar. 1915, applts. who were neutrals, shipped conditional contraband goods, namely fodder stuffs, from the United States in neutral ships under bills of lading which purported to make the goods deliverable to named neutral traders at Swedish ports. Their Lordships, affirming the decision of the Prize Ct. found that applts. had acted in the transactions by the directions of an agent of the German Govt., & that the persons named as con-signees in the bills of lading had no real interest in, or control over, the goods:—Held: (1) the persons to whom the bills of lading made the goods deliverable were not "the consignees of the goods" within the Order in Council, & the goods had been properly condemned as being destined for the German Government.

The consignee of goods must mean some person other than the consignor to whom the consignor parts with the real control of the goods (per CUR.).

(2) In considering, upon the principle of continuous voyage, what is the ultimate destination of goods which are conditional contraband, it is the intention of the person who is in a position to control the destination which is material.—THE LOUISIANA, [1918] A. In the present case there is no other person than the consignor to whom the consignor parts with the real control of the goods (per CUR.).

(2) Where a sum representing the value of the goods has been by agreement paid into ct., the ct. may condemn the goods for that sum, instead of condemning the goods themselves.—THE HELLIG OLAV, [1919] A. C. 526; 88 L. J. P. 23; 120 L. T. 98; 35 T. L. R. 127; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 380, P. C.

854. —. Necessity for bonâ fide commercial consignee.]—I am satisfied that the real owners of the goods at the time of seizure were Wilholm Boesch of Hamburg, & that Wadstrom knew this perfectly well. Wadstrom & co. therefore undertook the assertion of a false claim, & the assertion of a false claim by persons who were agents of the real owners, or who acted in contrivance with them, is enough to lead to condemnation . . . It was contended that the coffee in question being consigned to named consignees, was immune from seizure or capture under the operation of the Order in Council of Oct. 29, 1914, adopting with modifications Art. 35 of the Declaration of London. It is not easy to determine now the effect of Orders in Council purporting to adopt single provisions of the Declaration of London, which by its terms could not be ratified unless it was adopted in the whole. But, assuming the Order in Council of Oct. 29, 1914, to be valid in this regard, I repeat the opinion I have expressed in other cases, that the named "consignee" must be a real & genuine consignee in the business & commercial sense. The fact that a person who happens to be in existence is named, if he be merely a nominee without any interest, or dummy consignee, is not enough. A cargo of conditional contraband might be consigned according to the ship's papers, to an existing person having a Christian & a surname, who might be the town crier or the grave digger, of a particular locality. But if he was not concerned bonâ fide as a commercial consignee, however substantial his existence in the flesh might be, & he was only used as a name, or as a conduit pipe or channel for the transmission of goods through a neutral port to enemy merchants, he would not be a "named consignee" within the meaning & tenor of the Order in Council referred to (SIR SAMUEL EVANS).—THE SYDLAND, THE INDIANIC (1916), [1917] P. 161, n.; 86 L. If the Netherlands Oversea Trust were merely receiving conditional contraband goods as agents for the consignor to dispose of in accordance with his directions, then, if the goods had an ultimate enemy destination, they would be liable to condemnation; but if the Netherlands Oversea Trust were receiving the goods as agents for persons who had bought them & had the control over them, then, whatever their ultimate destination, the goods would not be liable to condemnation.—THE ORANJE NASSAU, [1919] P. 346; 89 L. Clause 1 (iii) provided that notwithstanding the provisions of Art. 35 conditional contraband should be liable to capture on board a vessel bound for a neutral port "if the goods are consigned 'to order,' or if the ship's papers do not show who is the consignee of the goods," such a person being construed in The Louisiana, No. 850, ante, as some person other than the consignor to whom the consignor has parted with the real control of the goods.

at Gothenburg who was the consignor's agent for sale. The coffee was claimed by another Swedish firm who had bought it from the consignors through the agency of the consignee in order to resell it to a firm in Hamburg:—Held: under ordinary circumstances, an agent for sale being a person who had to act according to his principal's instructions, he was not such a consignee as would satisfy the requirements of the Order in Council, & the coffee was subject to condemnation.—THE KRONPRINS GUSTAF, [1919] P. 182; 88 L. Neutral applts. shipped conditional contraband goods from America to Copenhagen under a bill of lading making them deliverable to their selling agent at that port, who advanced to them 70 per cent. of the value of the goods. The evidence showed that the goods were destined for Germany. There was 'no evidence of any special arrangement between applts. & their agent precluding applts. from controlling the ultimate destination of the goods:—Held: the goods were properly condemned.—THE URNA, [1920] A. 865. ———.]—THE TRENDE SOSTRE, No. 787, ante.

866. ———.]—(1) The law of prize contains a long established rule, known as the doctrine of infection, which condemns, as if contraband, goods which though not condemnable themselves belong or are deemed to belong when captured to the same owner as other cargo in the same vessel, which cargo itself is liable to condemnation as contraband.

(2) In applying this rule, effect must be given to the further rule of prize, also long established, which refuses to recognise transfers of the ownership of movables afloat from an enemy transferor to a neutral transferee, when unaccompanied by actual delivery of the goods.

(3) In applying the doctrine of infection, the ownership of the goods at the date of capture, & not the control of them, is the test.

(4) The doctrine does not rest upon the personal culpability or complicity of the owner to whose goods it is applied, & is applicable although he is not privy to the contraband enterprise.

(5) "Infected" goods in a neutral ship are not protected from condemnation by the Declaration of Paris. Consequently, where goods shipped by an enemy upon a neutral ship are liable to condemnation as having an enemy destination, & in the same ship (Kronprinsessan Margareta, first voyage) there are other goods purchased by a neutral from the enemy shipper, either after shipment, or before shipment upon f.o.b. terms payment against bill of lading, but the bill of lading has not been taken up until after the capture of the goods, then the purchased goods are liable to condemnation.

(6) The same result follows where (as in the case of the Parana) the goods have been purchased before shipment & are deliverable by the bill of lading to the purchaser, who has himself effected the insurance, but drafts drawn for the cost & freight price upon a confirmed bank credit established by the purchaser under the terms of the contract are not paid until after the capture. It cannot be inferred from these circumstances that the intention was that the property should pass before shipment.

(7) A Prize Ct. has not any discretion or authority to abrogate settled & binding rules of prize law on the ground that their application is inconvenient to, or inconsistent with, the smooth & regular working of modern commerce.—THE KRONPRINSESSAN MARGARETA, THE PARANA, [1921] 1 A. I could assent to that argument if the case stood only on the general law; but when I look to the order of Govt., I find "that all other goods are directed to be restored." So with regard to the ship: it has been uniformly held in general principles that the vessel belonging to the proprietor of contraband goods is liable to confiscation. But the order itself in directing the restitution of all other goods, implies that this class of cases is not to be decided, strictly, on the general principle of contraband (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NEPTUNUS (1807), 6 Ch. Illegal voyage.]—If it should appear that she [the ship] was going under this special privilege, as being fitted out in a French port, & destined to return to a French port, the ship & cargo will be liable to confiscation, as engaged in a course of trade exclusively French. . . . I am induced to think that foreign ships were permitted to go to Senegal, for the purpose of a general trade, though there might be a monopoly of gum. The opening introduced by the French edict, 1793, seems to have applied only to the direct trade between Senegal & France, for I think it is sufficiently proved, that foreign vessels were permitted to resort thither before that edict for the general purposes of trade. I am of opinion, therefore, that there is nothing in this case which renders the voyage so illegal as to induce the consequences of condemnation (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JULIANA (1803), 4 Ch. It has been repeatedly determined at this board, that neutrals are not at liberty to engage in a trade with the colony of the enemy in time of war, which is not permitted to foreign vessels in time of peace (LORD ELDON, C.).—THE WILLELMINA (1801), cited in 4 Ch. Rob. App. 4; 165 E. R. 665.

Anciently, the carrying of contraband, did, in ordinary cases, affect the ship, & although a relaxation has taken place, it is a relaxation, the benefit of which can only be claimed by fair cases. 908. Liability to confiscation on return voyage—Contraband carried on outward voyage.]—

Although a ship on her return is not liable to confiscation, for having carried a cargo of contraband on her outward voyage, yet it would be a little too much to say that all impression is done away; because if it appears that the owner had sent such a cargo under a certificate obtained on a false oath, that there was no contraband on board, it could not but affect his credit at least & induce the ct. to look very scrupulously to all the actions & representations of such a person. The master says, "That there was not more than was necessary for the ship's use"; but this practice is, even with this apology, sufficiently alarming, because it has appeared that other ships have been employed in carrying naval stores to Batavia in the same manner, not as principal cargoes, but in moderate quantities, under pretence of stores for the ship's own use, but which, nevertheless, were sold, as these were on their arrival at Batavia; it is apparent that the enemy may be supplied in this mode to a very great amount. What the master says in another place, is rather contradictory to this pretence; he says, "That there was not more than would be wanting for another ship which he had a design of purchasing at Batavia." Now, I must say that it could by no means be allowed, that neutrals shall be at liberty to carry out a larger quantity of articles of this nature than are wanting for their own ship's use under a speculation of purchasing other ships, & that when they are there, the speculation shall be relinquished, & the contraband articles be then sold as stores in the colonies of the enemy. If the speculation was originally really & bond fide entertained, on failure of it, the surplus should either be brought back again, or sold in some neutral port of that quarter of the world; for neutrals can have no right to carry out double stores of this description for a contingent purpose & then dispose of them to the enemy at their pleasure (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARGARETHA MAGDALENA (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 139; 105 E. R. 267.

909. ———.]—Parties having been convicted of sending out articles of a contraband nature to Batavia, i.e. a settlement of the enemy in the East Indies, with false papers for Tranquebar, & concerted instructions to conceal the real destination, are not permitted to give further proof of the returned cargo, being the proceeds of the contraband articles.

It is said . . . in cases of contraband, the return voyage has not usually been deemed connected with the outward. In European voyages of no great extent when the master goes out on one adventure, & receives, at his delivering ports, new instructions & further orders, in consequence of advice, obtained of the state of the markets, & other contingent circumstances, that rule has prevailed; but I do not think that in distant voyages to the East Indies, conducted in the manner this has been, the same rule is fit to be applied. In such a transaction, the different parts are not to be considered as two voyages, but as one entire transaction, formed upon one original plan, conducted by the same persons, & under one set of instructions, ab ovo usque et ad mala. . . Parties setting out on such expedition with ill faith, & pursuing that measure of ill faith up to its consummation, in the delivery, are implicated in the consequences of such a conduct throughout the whole sequel of that transaction (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NANCY (1800), 3 Ch. #### SUB-SECT. 6.—KNOWLEDGE OF CARRIAGE OF CONTRABAND.

918. Knowledge of shipowner.]—The modern rule of the law of nations is, certainly, that the ship shall not become subject to condemnation for carrying contraband articles. . . But this rule is liable to exceptions. Where a ship belongs to the owner of the cargo, or where the ship is going on such service, under a false destination or false papers, these circumstances of aggravation have been held to constitute excepted cases out of the modern rule, & to continue them under the ancient one. . . The ship was freighted at Altona to go to Archangel, for the purpose of carrying a cargo of tar to Holland which is a commerce expressly prohibited by the Danish treaty. Tar is an article which a Danish ship cannot lawfully carry to an enemy's port, even when it was the produce & manufacture of Denmark. The ship goes to a foreign port to effect that which she was prohibited from doing, even for the produce of her own country . . . with the full privity of the asserted owner, who is the person entering into the charterparty. . .

The known ground on which the relaxation was introduced, the supposition that freights of noxious or doubtful articles might be taken, without the personal knowledge of the owner, entirely fails & the active guilt of the parties was aggravated by the circumstances of its being a criminal traffic in foreign commodities & in breach of explicit & special

The evidence showed that the Gans Line organised the sailings to Copenhagen as a means of furnishing the German Govt. with supplies; that the masters of the vessels, who were appointed & paid by the owners, knew that they were engaged on a contraband transaction; & that the owners were aware that their vessels were bound to Copenhagen, a port to which they had not previously gone, & that they were carrying cargoes of foodstuffs.—Held: having regard to the broad facts of the whole transaction, the knowledge of the charterers, & the knowledge of the masters, the vessels were subject to condemnation.—THE KIM, THE BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSEN, THE ALFRED NOBEL, [1920] P. 319; 90 L. 931. Condemnation with compensation—Declaration of London—Vessel unaware of declaration of contraband.]—By the Declaration of London Order in Council No. 2, 1914, dated Oct. 29, 1914, it was declared that during the present hostilities the convention known as the Declaration of London should, subject to certain additions & modifications therein specified, be adopted & put into force by His Majesty's Govt. Art. 43 of the Declaration of London, which provides (inter alia) that if a vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the declaration of contraband which applies to her cargo the contraband cannot be condemned except on payment of compensation, was not excepted by the terms of the Order in Council. By the said order chrome ore was declared to be absolute contraband. In the prize proceedings for condemnation of a cargo of chrome ore shipped in June, 1914, from a foreign port on a Norwegian sailing vessel chartered by a German co., under a contract entered into in 1913 between an English co. & a German co., two claims were put in, one by the English co., the sellers, & the other by the Swedish co., which alleged that the ore had been purchased by them from the German co. No claim was made on behalf of the German co. The board approved the view of the President that art. 43 did not exclude the general rule applying that contraband belonging to an enemy on board a neutral vessel remained liable to condemnation without compensation. Accordingly the appeal of the Swedish co. was dismissed & that of the English co. withdrawn on the terms agreed between them & the Crown, which terms the board were prepared to approve.—THE SORFAREREN (1917), 117 L. ## SECT. 2.—IN WHAT COURT.

934. Competent court of capturing country.]—A prize should be brought infra præsidia of the capturing country, where, by being so brought, it may be considered, as incorporated into the mass of national stock. The greatest extension that has been allowed has not carried the rule beyond the ports or places of security, belonging to some friend or ally in the war, who has a common interest in defending the acquisitions of the belligerent, made from the common enemy of both. In later times, an additional formality has been required, that of a sentence of condemnation, in a competent ct., decreeing the capture to have been rightly made, jure belli; it not being thought fit, in civilised society, that property of this sort should be converted without the sentence of a competent ct., pronouncing it to have been seized as the property of an enemy, & to be now become jure belli the property of the captor (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HENRICK & MARIA (1799), 4 Ch. 935. ———.]—(1) Another question has arisen in this case, upon which a great deal of argument has been employed; namely, whether the sentence of condemnation which was pronounced by the French consul, is of such legal authority as to transfer the vessel, supposing the purchase to have been bond fide made? . . . I apprehend that by the general practice of the law of nations, a sentence of condemnation is at present deemed generally necessary; & that a neutral purchaser in Europe, during war, does not look to the legal sentence of condemnation as one of the title deeds of the ship if he buys a prize vessel. I believe there is no instance in which a man having purchased a prize vessel of a belligerent, has thought himself quite secure in making that purchase, merely because the ship had been in the enemy's possession twenty-four hours, or carried infra præsidia: the contrary has been more generally held, & the instrument of condemnation is amongst those documents which are most universally produced by a neutral purchaser (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) Now, in what form have these adjudications constantly appeared? They are the sentences of cts. acting & exercising their functions in the belligerent country; & it is for the very first time in the world, that in the year 1799, an attempt is made to impose upon the ct. a sentence of a tribunal not existing in the belligerent country,

e. Procedure as to condemnation.]—On an application by the Admiralty for directions as to procedure in regard to goods suspected of belonging to the enemy, which had been found on neutral & friendly ships & detained by the customs, the ct. directed that, where appearance had not been but of a person pretending to be authorised within the dominions of a neutral country; in my opinion, if it could be shown, that regarding mere speculative general principles, such a condemnation ought to be deemed sufficient; that would not be enough; more must be proved; it must be shown that it is conformable to the usage & practice of nations. . . . Now, it having been the constant usage, that the tribunals of the law of nations in these matters shall exercise their functions within the belligerent country; if it was proved to me in the clearest manner, that on mere general theory such a tribunal might act in the neutral country, I must take my stand on the ancient & universal practice of mankind; & say that as far as that practice has gone, I am willing to go; & where it has thought proper to stop, there I must stop likewise. . . . Having thus declared that there must be an antecedent usage upon the subject, I should think myself justified in dismissing the matter without entering into any further discussion. I see no sufficient ground to say that on mere general principles such a sentence could be sustained (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

956. — — — — — Doubt as to liability to condemnation—Detention until further order.]—By Art. 1 of the Hague Convention, 1907, No. 6, relative to the status of enemy merchant ships at the outbreak of hostilities, it is stated to be desirable that such a ship belonging to one of the belligerent powers in an enemy port should be allowed to depart within a reasonable number of days of grace, & by Art. 2, if, owing to circumstances beyond her control, the merchant ship has been unable to leave the enemy port within that period, or has not been allowed to leave, the vessel may not be confiscated but merely detained.

A German vessel arrived at the East Bute Dock, Cardiff, on Aug. 4, 1914, some hours before the outbreak of hostilities between Great Britain & Germany. She was, on the following day, detained by the Collector of Customs, & a writ was subsequently issued by the Procurator General for her condemnation:—Held: the vessel was properly seized by the officers of the Crown, but in view of the difficulty of ascertaining whether any days of grace had been agreed upon by Germany, the vessel would, on the application of counsel for the Crown, be detained by the marshal until further order, with liberty to apply & all questions of costs reserved.—THE CHILE, [1914] P. 212; 84 L. other port indicated to it. The same principle applies in the case of a ship which has left its last port of departure before the commencement of the war & has entered a port belonging to the enemy while still ignorant that hostilities have broken out." Art. 2 provides that "a merchant-ship which, owing to circumstances beyond its control, may have been unable to leave the enemy port within the period contemplated in the previous article, or which was not allowed to leave, may not be confiscated. The belligerent may merely detain it, on condition of restoring it after the war, without payment of compensation, or he may requisition it on condition of paying compensation."

A German merchant ship arrived at Port Said on Aug. 5, 1914, in ignorance that hostilities had broken out between Great Britain & Germany. From Aug. 5 to Aug. 14, she was not free to leave, but on Aug. 14 she was told that she could go if she liked. She neither asked for, nor was offered, a pass, & remained in port until Oct. 13, when the Egyptian Govt. took possession of her. On Oct. 16 she was taken out to sea & conducted to a British cruiser, which seized her as prize. These events took place before war was declared between Gt. Britain & Turkey & before Egypt had been declared a British Protectorate:—Held: after the outbreak of war between Great Britain & Germany, Port Said, as regards Germany, was an enemy port; assuming that the Convention applied to Egypt & was operative at the time, the question whether Art. 2, or any part of it, was obligatory, or whether, if the course referred to as "desirable" in Art. 1 were not taken, Art. 2 had any application to an enemy vessel which found itself in an enemy port at the outbreak of hostilities, or which subsequently entered without knowledge of the outbreak of hostilities, was a question of law arising on an international document involving a reciprocal obligation performable only at the end of the war; therefore the vessel must be detained until further order, leaving the ultimate rights between the parties to be determined after the war.—THE GUTENFELS, [1916] 2 A. By Art. 1 of the Convention it was stated to be desirable that a merchant ship in an enemy port at the outbreak of hostilities should be allowed to depart freely either immediately or after a reasonable number of days of grace; & by Art. 2, that if, owing to circumstances beyond her control, the ship had not been able to leave the port within that period, or had not been allowed to leave she might not be confiscated but merely detained.

On Aug. 3, 1914, a German liner bound from Philadelphia to Hamburg with passengers & cargo, having heard of the outbreak of war between France & Germany, put into Falmouth for orders. On the morning of Aug. 4, the master was told by the customs authorities that his vessel would not be allowed to leave. About 4 p.m. on that day he was told that the vessel was unconditionally released, but no steps were taken by the master indicating an intention to leave. From 11 p.m. on Aug. 4, a state of war existed between Great Britain & Germany; on the following morning the vessel was seized as prize. She was subsequently condemned on the ground that the Convention did not apply, as the vessel had entered the port in order to avoid French cruisers & not for any commercial purpose:—Held: their Lordships not proposing to decide at the present time what was the effect of the preamble of the Sixth Convention upon Arts. 1 & 2 an order should be advised similar to that in The Chile, No. 956, ante, so as to preserve all rights intact until the conclusion of the war.—THE PRINZ ADALBERT, [1918] A. 970. ———.] — This case involves a question as to the validity of sentences of condemnation pronounced in a belligerent country on prizes carried into neutral ports. . . . It appeared to me that the acknowledged practice of this country must have the effect of making those sentences valid, whilst that practice continued. 972. ———.] — THE FLAD OYEN, No. 935, ante.

973. ———. Condemnation sustained by court of belligerent country.]—(1) Condemnation in Norway before a French consul, invalid, not helped by a sentence of a Ct. of Prize in the enemy's country, decreeing restitution to the neutral claimant, on the circumstances of a subsequent capture.

Among the many novelties that the French have introduced into the world, the condemnation of prize vessels in neutral ports, under the authority of consular courts sitting there is not the least extraordinary. These condemnations, sustained by the tribunals of France, may be good & valid against French subjects on a second capture by French cruisers or in any other way in which they may come before them in transactions amongst their own subjects as considered by the law of their own country, but they are not binding on other countries. . . . There is nothing to show that the reversal of the second condemnation, passed upon any ground, that had a connection with the first condemnation in Norway, or, that affirmed that sentence, upon any view of its particular merits. If it affirmed it in any manner, I presume it would do so, only on the general ground, that these consular condemnations were to be sustained; in which it would be just as good, as that condemnation, & no better. But in truth, I presume it must have turned upon other questions, totally foreign to it; it never could have been, that the validity of such a condemnation had been disallowed by the inferior French ct., so as to make it necessary for the superior tribunal to support it by a reversal. I think, therefore, that these second proceedings in France add nothing to the real authority of the first proceedings in Norway; & as those proceedings cannot sustain the title of the neutral purchaser, I must overrule his protest, & admit the claim of the original proprietor (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) As to ordinary repairs, the ct. does not usually take any notice of them, the use of the ship being set off against them. . . . The proper rule for the registrar & merchants to pursue, would be to consider the quantum on the improved state in which the ship comes into the hands of the original proprietors. As to that part, it is not a restitution to them, but a new acquisition (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE KIERLICHETT (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 96; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 258; 165 E. R. 399.

Sect. 6.—Condemnation of British ships: Sub-sects. 1 & 2. Part IX. Sect. 1: Sub-sect. 1, A.]

974. — — — — —.]—The ship had been carried into Leghorn, where the French consul assumed a jurisdiction, & passed a sentence of condemnation on the ship & cargo. If the matter had rested there, on the validity of the consular sentence at Leghorn, this ct. . . . would not have held that title to be sufficient. But there has been also a sentence of the Conseil des Prises at Paris; . . . the Conseil des Prises at Paris, as now constituted, is a ct. of original jurisdiction, & also a ct. of appeal. It exercises a power of evocation, by which it can call before it causes from the inferior cts., which appear to exercise but a very limited jurisdiction. . . . Here, cases of common condemnations . . . pass on a view of the evidence of the case. The enemy proprietor is necessarily absent by operation of law, & yet the sentence is completely valid, as well against him as against all the world. . . . It is said that the claimant, having purchased under the original sentence, cannot cure the defect of that title by a subsequent sentence, passed after many changes of property, & when the vessel herself was no longer amenable, as a subject of prize proceedings, to the jurisdiction of the belligerent country, I cannot accede to that position. In our cts. it happens unavoidably, as to ships taken in the East Indies, that long before the case comes to the adjudication, the property may have passed to other hands. If the title is impeached before the sentence takes place, it may be vitiated; but when a valid sentence comes, it must be considered as operating retroactively, so as to rehabilitate the former title. A valid sentence has confirmed the title before any objection had been taken to it, & that title, derived from the original purchaser, has been properly conveyed to the neutral claimant (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FALCON (1805), 6 Ch. 978. — — — — —.]—Condemnation in France of a British ship, taken by a French privateer into a Spanish port, & lying there at the time of condemnation, held valid.

In such cases there is nothing to prevent the government from proceeding to that last act of hostility; there is a common interest between them on the subject; & both govts. may be presumed to authorise any measures conducing to give effect to their arms, & to consider each other's ports as mutually subservient. I am therefore inclined to hold such a condemnation sufficient, in regard to property taken in the course of the operations of a common war. As the facts of purchase appear to be sufficiently proved on the further proof that has been exhibited, I shall decree restitution of this ship for the claimants (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CHRISTOPHER (1799), 2 Ch. 979. — — — — — British character divested.]—The vessel was captured, & carried into a port of the enemy, by which act duly pursued, the best title in the world might be extinguished, & by which a strong ground of presumption is laid that the right of the former proprietor has, in fact, been legally divested, in a regular & effective manner, for the presumption is, that being so carried, the vessel was subjected to a legal condemnation. Under these circumstances, I think the former proprietor is not at liberty to take on himself the character of owner until he can prove his title has not been legally divested. . . . When the case comes to proof, he says, . . . I will call upon the other side, to make out every step of the purchase, & the onus lies with him. Certainly it does not, under such circumstances, but if it did, there is a bill of sale on board, & a sentence of condemnation in the Prize Ct. of France, proof sufficient to establish a good title in all ordinary cases, even of prize. It would be going beyond the bounds which this Instance Ct. of Admiralty has hitherto prescribed to its practice, to call on claimant to support the prima facie evidence of a good title, which is already exhibited (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE COUNTESS OF LAUDERDALE (1802), 4 Ch. If persons will accept ships in this manner, after such a notice, it must be at their own peril that they proceed to lay out money upon a title so notoriously invalid (per Cur.).—THE NOSTRA DE CONCEICAS (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 294; 165 E. R. 781.

Civil condemnation & sale during peace—Subsequent hostilities—Right of former owner on capture.]—Restitution to former British owners under Prize Act is confined to captures during the war; not to be extended to a vessel, confiscated in time of peace, for a violation of the revenue laws of France.

It is not in the power of the ct. to give this relief. The provisions of Prize Act apply to goods taken by the enemy as prize; & direct, with regard to such property, that, on recapture, it shall revert to the former British owner. This ship was seized for an alleged violation of the revenue laws of France, in a time of absolute & entire peace. . . . The seizure & condemnation, in time of peace, will have the effect of working an entire defeasance of the British title; & the ship must be condemned to the captor, as property of the enemy taken in the ordinary course of prize (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JEUNE VOYAGEUR (1803), 5 Ch. #### SUB-SECT. 1.—NATURE OF JURISDICTION.

A. Exclusive Jurisdiction.

See Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 23, 56 (3).

992. General rule.]—Where the Admty. has jurisdiction, their sentence binds the party, & at common law, ct. must take it according to their determination.—BROOM'S CASE (1697), 1 Salk. 32; 91 E. R. 34; sub nom. R. v. BROOM, 5 Mod. Rep. 340; 12 Mod. Rep. 134; Carth. 398; sub nom. R. v. BROME, Comb. 444.

994. —.]—Many persons, in the same case, under the same circumstances, upon the same ground, have severally applied for a prohibition, to stop the judges of the Admty. from proceeding upon a monition, issued in the usual form, in order to the condemnation of goods, wares, merchandises, arms, stores & ammunition, taken & seized, by his Majesty's land & sea forces, under the command of Admiral Rodney & General Vaughan, at the island of St. Eustatius, & its dependencies, upon the surrender of the said island of St. Eustatius, & its dependencies, on or about Feb. 3, last; & citing all persons to show cause, why they should not be pronounced to have belonged, at the time of the capture & seizure, to our enemies, & as goods of enemies, or otherwise liable to confiscation, be adjudged, & condemned as good & lawful prize. . . . The taking a ship upon the high sea is triable at law to repair pltf. in damages; but a taking on the high sea, as prize, is not triable at law to repair pltf. in damages. The nature of the ground of the action, prize or not prize, not only authorises the Prize Ct., but excludes the common law. . . . By the law of nations, & treaties, every nation is answerable to the other for all injuries done, by sea or land, or in fresh waters, or in port. Mutual convenience, eternal principles of justice, the wisest regulations of policy, & the consent of nations, have established a system of procedure, a code of law, & a ct. for the trial of prize. Every country sues in these cts. of the others, which are all governed by one & the same law, equally known to each. The claimant is not obliged to sue the captors for damages, & undergo all the delay & vexation to which he may think himself liable, if he sues by a form of litigation, of which he is totally ignorant, & subjects his property to the rules & authority of a municipal law, by which he is not bound. . . . We are all of opinion, that the rule should be discharged (LORD MANSFIELD).—LINDO v. RODNEY (1782), 2 Doug. K. B. 613, n.; 99 E. R. 385.

995. —.]—It is established upon the authority of a regular series of decisions, that the question of prize or no prize cannot be tried at common law, but must be tried before the judge of the High Ct. of Admty.; & that the jurisdiction depends not upon the locality, or upon the parties, but upon the nature of the question, which is such as cannot be tried by any rules of the common law, but by a more general law, viz. the law of nations, which is administered by forms best adapted to the subject of its jurisdiction, & the interests of the parties.—MITCHELL v. RODNEY (1783), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 423; 1 E. R. 1039, H. L.

996. —.]—The Prize Cts., & Cts. of Lords Comrs. of Appeals, have the sole & exclusive jurisdiction over the question of prize or no prize, & who are the captors, notwithstanding any of the Prize Acts; & if they pronounce a sentence of condemnation, adjudging also who are the captors, the cts. of common law cannot examine the justice or propriety of it, even though perhaps they would have put a different construction on the Prize Acts. The same Cts. have power to enforce their decrees. Therefore where the Lords Comrs. had issued a monition after sentence to a navy agent, employed by persons supposed to be entitled to the prize, requiring him to bring the produce of it into Ct. to be distributed among the persons declared

997. —[(1) The Ct. of Admty. will exercise a jurisdiction over a foreign ship rescued from the enemy, if there is any British subject concerned in the rescue who prays to be rewarded here.

Although it is meritorious to rescue, by force of arms, from an enemy; it is quite the reverse to rescue from a neutral, from whom the owner would have a right to claim costs & damages for an unjust seizure & detention. . . . British born subjects returning to their own country [in an American ship], without any engagement or intention to go back to America, & without having any domicile there, & merely working their passage homeward on board this ship . . . are not at all in the condition of American subjects; neither are they so to be considered in this act, even if hired as mariners on board this American vessel; for this act was no part of their general duty as seamen; they were not bound by their general duty as mariners to attempt a rescue; nor would they have been guilty of a desertion of their duty in that capacity, if they had declined it. It is a meritorious act to join in such attempts; . . . but it is an act perfectly voluntary, in which each individual is a volunteer, & is not acting as a part of the crew of the ship in discharge of any official duty either ordinary or extraordinary (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

. . . (3) I know no other definition of prize goods than that they are goods taken on the high seas, jure belli, out of the hands of the enemy; & there is no axiom more clear than that such goods, when they come on shore, may be followed by the process of this ct. In such cases the common law cts. hold they have no jurisdiction, & are even anxious to disclaim it. . . . If the goods are removed before proceedings are commenced they are still liable to be called in by a monition (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(4) Being of opinion that M. [one of the British subjects in the American ship] was in reality a passenger, & that his services had been very instrumental in effecting the rescue, the ct. pronounced that he should be rewarded equally with the master (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TWO FRIENDS (1799), 1 Ch. (2) There is a distinction between commissioned & non-commissioned captors, & cts. are astute in discovering reasons to release commissioned captors from liability.

(3) The only evidence produced of the date of the blockade is the Gazette, & that is only prima facie, not conclusive, evidence.

The Ct. of Admty. is bound to take notice of an illegal practice, evidently appearing in the conduct of a British subject, though the illegality arises from a violation of some law merely municipal; & it is bound to reject the claim of any British subject, whose property had found its way into the hands of a British captor, if the transaction in which that property had been employed was a transaction contrary to British law (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE WALSINGHAM PACKET (1799), 2 Ch. 1018. —.]—This [Prize Ct.] is a ct. of the law of nations, though sitting here under the authority of the King of Great Britain. It belongs to other nations as well as to our own, & what foreigners have a right to demand from it, is the administration of the law of nations simply, & exclusively of the introduction of principles borrowed from our own municipal jurisprudence, to which they have at all times expressed no inconsiderable repugnance. In the case of a British subject it is different. To him it is a British tribunal, as well as a ct. of the law of nations; & if he has been trampling on the known laws of his country, it is no injustice to say, that a person coming into any of the cts. of his own country, to which he is naturally amenable, on such a transaction, can receive no protection from them (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE RECOVERY (1807), 6 Ch. That principle has been incorporated into the prize law of this country within the last twenty years, & seems now fully incorporated (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FORTUNA (1811), 1 Dods. 81; 1 Eng. The constitution of this ct., relatively to the legislative power of the King in Council is analogous to that of the cts. of common law relatively to that of the Parliament of this kingdom (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FOX (1811), 1 Edw. 311; 2 Eng. 1071. —[The Crown has no power by Order in Council to prescribe or alter the law which Prize Cts. have to administer, even where that law is imperfectly ascertained & defined; but when an Order in Council mitigates the rights of the Crown in favour of enemies or neutrals it is the duty of the Prize Ct. to act upon it.

(2) The ct. will take judicial notice of every Order in Council material to the consideration of matters with which it has to deal, & will give the utmost weight to every such Order short of treating it as a binding declaration of law. Thus, an Order declaring a blockade will prima facie justify the condemnation of vessels attempting to enter the blockaded ports, but will not preclude evidence to show that the blockade is ineffective, & therefore unlawful; & an Order authorising reprisals will be conclusive as to the facts which are recited as showing that a case for reprisals exists, but it will not preclude the right of the ct. to hold that these means are unlawful, as entailing on neutrals a degree of inconvenience unreasonable in all the circumstances of the case.

(3) The inherent power of the Prize Ct. to sell or realise property in its custody pending adjudication is confined to cases in which the preservation of the property is impossible or difficult.

A belligerent Power has by international law the right to requisition vessels or goods in the custody of its Prize Ct., but subject to the following limitations: (a) the property must be urgently required for use in connection with the defence of the realm, the prosecution of the war, or other matters involving national security; (b) there must be a real question to be tried, so that it would be improper to order immediate release; (c) the Prize Ct. must decide judicially whether, under the particular circumstances, the right is exercisable.

(4) In proceedings to which, under the new practice in prize, the Crown, instead of the actual captors, is a party, damages & costs may be awarded against the Crown or the officer who represents the Crown.

(5) A neutral vessel, bound to Stockholm with a contraband cargo (copper) consigned to a Swedish co., was stopped at sea by a British cruiser & taken to a British port. A writ having been issued in prize, a summons was taken out by the Procurator-General on behalf of the War Dept. to requisition the cargo under Order XXIX. of the Prize Ct. Rules, as authorised by an Order in Council of Apr. 29, 1916. Order XXIX., rule 1, provides that if it is made to appear to the judge that it is desired to requisition property in the custody of the Prize Ct. in respect of which no final decree of condemnation has been made, he shall, upon an undertaking to pay the appraised value into ct., deliver the property to the Crown. The judge made the order accordingly:—Held: Order XXIX., rule 1, construed as an imperative direction to the ct., was not binding; & as the judge had no satisfactory evidence before him that the copper was urgently required, the order must be set aside.—THE ZAMORA, [1916] 2 A. 1080. —.]—When an Order in Council of a retaliatory character recites that the enemy has committed breaches of international law which justify retaliatory measures, the Order is conclusive that just cause for such measures exists. It is, however, open to a person aggrieved to contend, & the right of the Prize Ct. to hold, that the measures adopted are unlawful in that they entail on neutrals a degree of inconvenience which is unreasonable, considering all the facts of the case. An Order in Council of Mar. 11, 1915, recited that the German Govt. had issued certain Orders which gave His Majesty an unquestionable right of retaliation, & provided, inter alia, that every merchant ship on her way to a port other than a German port, carrying goods with an enemy destination, might be required to discharge the goods at a British port. The Order made no provision for compensation.

A neutral ship on her way to Rotterdam with goods destined for Germany was required to discharge at a British port; no unreasonable delay or expense in carrying out the provision of the Order was incurred:—Held: the Order in Council did not entail unreasonable inconvenience on neutrals & was valid, & that the neutral ship-owner was not entitled to damages for the detention of the ship or to expenses.—THE STIGTAD, [1919] A. Then can a claim be sustained for wages, on board an enemy's ship? The vessel is avowedly a French ship; & these persons must be taken to be French sailors. There is indeed less reason for any relaxation of the general principle in this branch of navigation, than in any other; because the ratio of wages is a material part of the trade itself, being the ordinary mode of carrying on that particular species of commerce (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FREDERICK (1803), 5 Ch. 1103. — On return of peace—Rights not forfeited during war.]—Rights of claimant revive on the return of peace, no step being taken during the interval of war, declaratory of the forfeiture of those rights to the crown.

I am clearly of opinion that the objection is not sustainable, it is true that the intervention of hostilities puts the property of the enemy in such a situation that confiscation may ensue, but unless some step is taken for that purpose, unless there is some legal declaration of the forfeiture, the right of the owner revives on the return of peace . . . & I am, therefore, of opinion that the rights of the Spanish proprietor do revive (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NEUSTRA SENORA DE LOS DOLORES (1809), Edw. 60; 165 E. 1106. — Special circumstances must be shown—By affidavit.]—A German merchant steamship, owned by a German limited co. resident in Germany, left a British port some hours before war commenced between this country & Germany, & was captured at sea while still ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities. Art. 3 of Convention 6 of the Second Hague Peace Conference, 1907, provides that enemy merchant ships which left their last port of departure before the commencement of war, & are encountered on the high seas while still ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities, may not be confiscated, but are merely liable to be detained, etc. This convention was signed by Great Britain, but, when signed by Germany, Art. 3 was reserved. As regards this vessel, first on behalf of the Crown, a decree of condemnation as prize was claimed; secondly, on behalf of the owners, it was contended that they were entitled to appear against this claim in the Prize Ct., though the affidavit filed on their behalf did not show any special circumstances entitling them to appear; thirdly, on behalf of certain shareholders in the vessel, & other claimants who had paid disbursements or rendered services in respect of the vessel, it was contended that they had some rights in the Prize Ct. in respect of the vessel; fourthly, on behalf of neutral mortgagees of the vessel, it was contended that the amount due under the mortgage should be paid out of the proceeds of the vessel when sold:—Held: (1) Art. 3 of Convention 6 did not apply in the circumstances, & the vessel must be condemned as prize & not merely detained; (2) the German owners had no right to appear in the Prize Ct., as no special circumstances were shown entitling them to appear; (3) the shareholders, & claimants in respect of disbursements, etc., had no rights in the Prize Ct. in respect of the vessel but could only apply to the bounty of the Crown; & (4) the claim of the mtgees. must be rejected.

The ct. has no hesitation in pronouncing that upon the authorities, upon principle, & upon grounds of convenience & practice, the claim of the neutral mtgees. of this captured vessel must be rejected. The same conclusion would be arrived at if the claim were by British subjects. It need scarcely be added that the Crown, being entitled to captured property, may out of its bounty deal favourably with any such claims (SIR SAMUEL EVANS, P.).—THE MARIE GLAESER, [1914] P. 218; 84 L. 1109. — Claim by neutral shippers—On behalf of enemy underwriters.—Goods seized as prize in a British ship were, at the date of seizure, the property of a neutral firm. The goods were insured against war risks, nearly the whole of the insured amount being underwritten by Germans at Hamburg. After seizure, the German underwriters paid a total loss, & it was thereupon agreed that they should become owners of the goods. The neutral firm subsequently claimed in the prize proceedings, the claim being really on behalf of the German underwriters. The Prize Ct. dismissed the claim, & condemned the goods:—Held: the claim was properly dismissed; but, without deciding that the condemnation was wrong & the Crown consenting, the condemnation should be set aside, the proceeds of the goods remaining in the Prize Ct. until further order.—THE PALM BRANCH, [1919] A. The ct. was left to suppose they were claimants of undivided shares; in that case the claim would have been proper. . . . But where the proprietors are not partners, it is certainly not proper to claim in that manner, but the respective interest should be specifically set forth (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

(2) Although it is the ordinary form of clearing out from a belligerent country to bear an ostensible destination to a neutral port, yet no one imputes that as a fraud, nor is it considered as such an act as would justly subject neutral property, on board neutral ships, to be molested on that account (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

That inference may be modified or rebutted, by particular arrangements between the shippers & the consignee, & is subject to the rules which arise out of a state of war existing, or imminent at the beginning of the transaction. 1149. Detention due to exercise of belligerent rights—Claim by British or allied owner.]—As indicated in the judgment in The Juno, No. 1151, post, British shipowners, in war time, are not permitted to claim for any delay or inconvenience incurred by reason of the diversion or detention of their vessel for the purpose of seizure & making unlively of confiscable enemy property. The loss, if any, to the shipowner results from the war & must be submitted to, just as he is not entitled to bring into the estimation of the freight any alleged excess in the cost of discharging at the port at which the vessel actually delivered the cargo, & the cost at the port to which she was originally destined.—THE TREDEGAR HALL, [1916] P. 217; 32 T. Marshal to give them a reasonable sum out of the proceeds of the cargo.—THE CUMBERLAND (1915), 31 T. L. R. 198.

Whilst there, & after the outbreak of war the three parcels were seized by the customs authorities & subsequently condemned as lawful prize. The shipowners thereupon raised a claim for freight, & also for expenses incurred by reason of the detention of the vessel owing to the seizure of the goods:—Held: the claim to some freight, & to the items for extra costs of discharging & shifting the goods at Swansea, should be allowed against the cargoes, & in ascertaining the total amount, the following general rule would assist the registrar & merchants in this & similar cases: such a sum to be allowed for freight as is fair & reasonable in all the circumstances, regard being had to the rate of freight originally agreed, though this is not necessarily conclusive, to the extent to which the voyage has been made, to the labour & cost expended, or any special charges, incurred in respect of the cargo seized before its seizure & unlivery, & to the benefit accruing to the cargo from the carriage on the voyage up to the seizure & unlivery; but no sum to be allowed, unless there be some special & exceptional circumstances, in respect of any inconvenience or delay attributable to the war or to the consequent diversion, detention, & seizure, as such matters are the unfortunate results of a state of war to which those engaged in shipping must submit.—THE JUNO, [1916] P. 169; 84 L. 1170. Rate of freight—Not necessarily measured by charterparty.]—The charterparty is not the measure by which the captor in all cases is bound, even where no fraud is imputed to the contract itself. When, by the events of war, navigation is rendered so hazardous as to raise the price of freight to an extraordinary height, captors are not necessarily bound to that inflated rate of freight. When no such circumstance exists, when a ship is carrying on an ordinary trade, the charterparty is undoubtedly the rule of valuation, unless impeached; the captor puts himself in the place of the owner of the cargo, & takes with that specific lien upon it. But a very different rule is to be applied, when the trade is subjected to extraordinary risk & hazard, from its connection with the events of war, & the redoubled activity & success of the belligerent cruisers. This is a case of that kind (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TWILLING RIGET (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 82; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 430; 165 E. R. 705.

1176. — Without admitting liability.]—A cargo of refined petroleum oil in bulk, owned by a German co., was shipped at Port Arthur, Texas, on board a British vessel bound for Hamburg. The vessel reached the English Channel after the outbreak of hostilities between Great Britain & Germany, & at the suggestion of the Lords Comrs. of the Admty., her owners diverted her to a port in the United Kingdom, Dartmouth, for orders. From there they ordered her to proceed to Purfleet & there discharge the oil into tanks of the British co. owning the wharf. When the larger part of the cargo had been so discharged an officer of the customs gave the master of the vessel notice in writing that the whole of the cargo was "placed under detention." On an application by the Crown for the condemnation of the cargo as lawful prize seized in port, & objection taken that the tanks were "on land" & therefore, not within the jurisdiction of the Prize Ct.:—Held: (1) the tanks were, in effect, oil warehouses, & warehouses were included in the definition of a "port." The case, therefore, was within the jurisdiction of the ct., & the whole of the oil cargo was maritime prize subject to seizure as & where it was, at the time the notice was given, whether on board the ship or in the tanks.

(2) The Crown without admitting liability consented to pay the owners of the vessel such pro rata freight as the registrar & merchants should find to be reasonable as well as the charges of the owners of the oil tanks for landing & storage.

This is a question concerning a remnant of a cargo . . . which has been condemned for want of further proof, after the neutral owner of the ship had obtained a sentence of restitution of the vessel, with freight & expenses, decreed to be a charge on the cargo. . . . On general principles, when condemnation has been obtained, the captor's claims appear to have rather the advantage. . . . The neutral has a right to carry the property of the enemy, but subject to the right of the belligerent to bring in the ship so employed, for the purpose of bringing the cargo to adjudication. . . . A neutral vessel so engaged is not exposed to any penalty at all, but she is entitled to her freight, as a lien attaching on the cargo. The captor takes cum onere. The freight attaches as a lien, which he must discharge by payment, provided . . . that there are no unneutral circumstances in the conduct of the ship, to induce a forfeiture of this demand. But the expenses of the neutral master appear to me to stand on a somewhat different footing. As to them, this distinction seems to present itself, supposing the law to be that the neutral ship is liable to be brought in; if she can carry the property of the enemy lawfully, on that condition only, I do not know that she is entitled to the expenses incurred in consequence of being so brought in. . . . It does not appear that the neutral master would, on principle merely, be entitled to an indemnification for expenses so incurred. He is bound to know the condition annexed to his right, & to abide the consequences. A more favourable practice has obtained under which his expenses are usually allowed. . . . But it is not a claim, which the neutral master is entitled to urge against the captor, as a right equally original, & equally vested in him, & in the same manner, as freight is vested, by the receipt of the cargo on board, & the performance of the contract of conveyance. It is said that the cargo was condemned, not as enemy's property, but for want of further proof, & the attestation of the asserted owner. Can that make any difference? . . . The captor is as much entitled, as if the cargo had been condemned on affirmative grounds, & in the first instance on positive evidence, that it was the property of the enemy (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE BREMEN FLUGGE (1801), 4 Ch. Rob. 90; 165 E. R. 546.

1179. —.]—Freight is, in all ordinary cases, a lien which is to take place of all others. The captor takes cum onere. It is the allowed privilege of neutral trade to carry the property of the enemy, subject to its capture, & to the temporary detention of his vessel; & if the party does not prevaricate, or conduct himself in any respect with ill faith, he is entitled to his freight. It is the general rule. . . . There is one class of cases to which it ought not to be applied: the case of ships, carrying on a trade between ports of allied enemies; a trade which may be said to arise in a great measure out of the circumstances of the war, though not altogether; . . . because such a trade exists in a limited degree in times of peace. . . . In such a course of trade, although the ct. has not altogether refused freight to the neutral ship, yet it may not think it unreasonable, that the captor should, in preference, be entitled to his expenses. . . . In the present case, the voyage is not between the ports of allied enemies, but between the ports of two belligerents, from Valencia to London. That constitutes . . . a sort of middle case, with respect to the obligation by which the captor might conceive himself bound to bring the cargo to adjudication. There might be a presumption undoubtedly that the property belonged to the enemy exporter. But there is a foundation, also, for presuming that it might belong to the consignee, & that it would not have been sent on a destination to this country, but under the protection of a licence. . . . I shall apply a sort of a middle judgment. I will allow the captor his law expenses, & direct the other expenses to be postponed to the payment of freight (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROW HENRICA (1803), 4 Ch. Rob. 342; 165 E. R. 634.

*Sect. 4.—In respect of what matters claims allowed:
Sub-sect. 3, C., D., E., F. & G.]*

It has happened, that since the restitution of the vessel, she has sustained some injury by the embargo, which was imposed on all Danish ships. The ship was, however, at last liberated, & went away with a decree for freight, & expenses, to be a charge on the cargo; but the ct. did not in any matter determine that a burthen was to be thrown on the captor. It was supposed that the cargo would be sufficient; though unfortunately the event has proved otherwise. Greater expenses may probably have been incurred on account of the embargo. . . . I am of the opinion that the ct. cannot do more than carry into effect the decree which has been made, by ordering the proceeds to be paid to the neutral master. If he has any further demands, they must be prosecuted against the consignee (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HAABET (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 302; 165 E. R. 620.

1193. ———.]—Under these circumstances there cannot be the slightest pretence for a claim of demurrage, against the cargo, on any ground whatever. . . . It is impossible to say that she had earned more than a freight pro rata itineris. . . . The expense of conveying the cargo to its ultimate destination belongs to the cargo only, the contract having been in effect determined by the payment of freight pro rata itineris (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

The maxim that capture is delivery is not to be taken in the general way in which it has been laid down. It is by no means true, except where the captor succeeds fully to the rights of the enemy, & represents him as to those rights. If a neutral vessel, having enemy's goods, is taken, the captor pays the whole freight, because he represents the enemy by possessing himself of the enemy's goods jure belli (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE COPENHAGEN (1799), 1 Ch. The ship was restored by consent on July 2, whilst no claim was given for the cargo till July 17, & restitution did not pass till Nov. 16. The case of the cargo was litigated. . . . I cannot say that a ship shall wait all such time for the mere chance of taking on the cargo, if eventually it should be restored. It was said that the contract was totally dissolved, but . . . it was in no degree owing to the owner of the ship who might have carried on the cargo, but that the owner of the cargo was not ready to proceed. . . . 1201. — — — — —]—Shortly before the outbreak of war a British ship left a Russian port in the Black Sea with a grain cargo for Hamburg, & on the declaration of war between Great Britain & Germany her owners, at the suggestion of the British Admty., diverted the vessel to a British port where the cargo was seized by the customs authorities, & subsequently sold by the marshal, the proceeds being paid into ct. The Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, as owners, claimed the proceeds of part of the cargo, namely, two parcels of barley, & the amount was paid out to them subject to a claim by the shipowners for freight & charges:—Held: though at common law no freight was due as the contract of affreightment had not been carried out, & had become illegal by reason of the war, the Prize Ct., acting on equitable principles, would allow such a fair & reasonable sum in respect of freight & charges as should be ascertained by a reference.—THE IOLO, [1916] P. 206; 85 L. 1204. — — — — —]—Freight refused to a neutral ship carrying salt from one Spanish port to another. This is the case of a ship sailing under Danish colours & taken with a cargo of salt, on a voyage from Cadiz to Castropol in Galicia. The ship had been restored, reserving the question of freight & expenses. The cargo had been condemned as the property of the King of Spain & the question now is . . . whether freight & expenses shall be allowed to the neutral ship.

Where a capture is made of a cargo, the property of an enemy, carried in a neutral ship, the neutral shipowner obtains against the captor those rights which he had against the enemy. . . . This principle . . . is liable to some exceptions; as, for instance, . . . contraband goods. If an enemy puts on board a neutral vessel a cargo belonging to himself, which is a contraband cargo, & that cargo is taken, it is condemnable to the captor; but the ct. will not consider itself as bound to enforce the payment of freight, against the captors, although at the same time, the neutral shipowner might have just reason to demand it from the enemy, with respect to whom his contract has been performed, as far as he had not been disabled from fulfilling it by the very circumstance of the other contracting party having put a cargo of that species on board, & consequently exposed the vessel to hostile seizure; & the ct. may, in like manner, not conceive itself under any obligation to say, in other instances, that the captors are liable to the charge of freight, although it may be a good & valid demand against the owner, which the parties must settle elsewhere. . . . In our own country it has long been the system that the coasting trade shall only be carried on by our own navigation. . . . In the ordinary state of affairs, no indulgence is generally permitted to the ships of most other countries to carry on the coasting trade. . . . As to a coasting trade, supposing it to be a trade not usually opened to foreign vessels, can there be described a more effective accommodation that can be given to an enemy during a war than to undertake it for him during his own disability? . . .

A person living bonâ fide in a neutral country, is fully entitled to carry on a trade to the same extent as the native merchants of the country in which he resides, provided it is not inconsistent with his native allegiance (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE EMANUEL (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 296; 165 E. R. 183.

H. Ship detained under Embargo.

1216. Freight not allowed.—Freight demanded by a ship under embargo, against a cargo, but unloaded, to be sent on by another conveyance, not given.

The cargo is claimed for persons not subject to the embargo. The ship was brought in as a Swedish ship, & on that account only the detention has been occasioned, without any co-operation on the part of the cargo. The cargo has been brought out of its course, & has been detained on account of the ship, & is finally compelled to find another vehicle to convey it to its market. Under such circumstances it is not liable to the demand of freight (per Cur.).—THE WERLDSBORGAREN (1801), 4 Ch. Rob. 17; 165 E. R. 520.

1222. — Payment innocently made.—(1) Before the outbreak of war, a British steamship left an Australian port for Antwerp with cargo deliverable to order, & after the outbreak of war, put into Torbay for coal. As the ship's papers showed that the charterers were a German co., the Customs officers at Brixham seized the cargo on suspicion that it was enemy owned, & a writ was duly issued. Of this cargo a portion was claimed by a British co. on the ground that they had taken up the shipping documents, accepted the shippers' drafts for the value of the goods, & paid the freight. A Belgian co. also claimed as owners if it should be held that the property had passed from the British co.; but the President condemned this portion of the cargo as being, on the evidence, at the time of seizure, enemy property belonging to the German charterers, the British co. being merely pledgees of the documents & therefore, in accordance with the decision in The Odessa, The Woolston, No. 1121, ante, not recognised in a prize ct.

(2) Another consignment was claimed as to one-fourth share each by the British co., the Australian Metal co., a registered British co., which shipped all the goods; but the majority of whose shareholders were German, & a British partnership, as being members of a "pool" along with the German charterers.—Held: the German co. were, at the time of seizure, the owners, notwithstanding that they had to account for the ultimate profits to the three other members of the pool, & if the pool were deemed a partnership of three British partners & one enemy partner, so that the consignment was the joint property of the four partners, it was incumbent on the three British partners to show, which they had not done, that they had taken prompt steps to sever their business relationship with the enemy partner on the outbreak of war, just as it rests upon a resident in hostile territory to prove that he was not there animo manendi.

(3) A British banking co. innocently & honestly paid freight under the impression that they were entitled to have the goods delivered to them as holders of the bills of lading, & in ignorance of the fact that the goods had already been seized as prize on behalf of the Crown.—Held: the payment must be treated as made under a mistake, & the money repaid to the bank out of the proceeds of sale of the condemned cargoes.—THE MANNINGTRY, [1916] P. 329; 32 T. 1225. Claim by captor.]—This is the case of a cargo purchased in the colonies of the enemy. . . . When the master sailed from Hamburg, claimants told him that they were the owners of the cargo, but gave him no instructions to claim for them in case of capture. On being brought into this country as a prize, he claimed the ship, but not with any precipitation, or in any such manner as to raise the slightest suspicion of collusion. The cargo required further proof; the master was under no obligation to stay for it, nor had the captor any right to detain him, or to make a warehouse of his ship. When the vessel is liberated, the cargo must be preserved somewhere. . . . Under the circumstances . . . the expense appears to have been incurred from a necessity arising out of the cargo, & I shall decree them to fall as a charge on the property (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE INDUSTRIE (1804), 5 Ch. Rate of warehouse charges—No right in harbour authority to differentiate—In case of prize cargo.]—By the Bristol Docks Acts the Bristol Corpn. acquired certain docks & were empowered to charge reasonable warehouse rates & rents, Bristol Docks Act, 1881 (c. clxxvii), s. 8, providing that all rates on the same description of articles should be charged without partiality & without regard to the person to whom they belonged. The Acts incorporated the Harbours, Docks, & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), which by sect. 30 makes it illegal for the corpn. to differentiate their warehouse rates & rents as between various owners or persons interested in cargoes:—Held: each of the above provisions precluded the corpn. from charging higher warehouse rates & rents in the case of prize grain cargoes taken into store under the order of the Board of Trade or the Admty. 1239. — —.]—Whoever purchases under an illegal title does it at his own peril; & must take the consequences, both in his purchase & in his own subsequent expenditure upon it, of his inattention to his own security; but I think this was not a title so notoriously bad, at the time when this purchase was made, as to bring it fairly under the application of the general rule to its utmost extent. . . . It appears that a sum of money has been expended on the repairs of this vessel by which claimant will be benefited, though not to the amount of the sum laid out; something must be allowed for wear & tear, & besides, the party who has expended this sum, has had the use of the vessel in the meantime: I shall therefore not allow the whole sum, but I shall take a moiety & I shall allow that, in consideration of the benefit which the original owners are likely to receive from the amelioration (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE PERSEVERANCE (1799), 2 Ch. 1240. — Proceeds of cargo applied in repairs—Claim by captors.]—(1) Average against the ship, on the part of the captors, in right of the cargo, as demanded, for part of the cargo applied to the repairs of the ship, not sustained.

(2) The right of war is a right in re, & the Ct. of Prize accordingly attends only to the res ipsa, & the onera attaching on the property in right of possession. The ship has the possession of the cargo, which the master is not bound to deliver, till he has been satisfied for his demand of average, if he has such, in the same manner, as for his demand of freight. He has the res ipsa in his possession, & may legally detain it. The captor succeeds to the rights of the owner of the ship, when that is condemned, & may detain the cargo also, in virtue of these rights when they exist. But with respect to the cargo, it is very different. That has not in any manner, a right of possession against the ship; it may have the jus in rem, possibly, but it has not the jus in re, & consequently no right of detention existing at the time of seizure. . . . The right of capture attaches, according to the state in which the property is found; but if a former freight is due to the ship, the captor could not exact it, since he has not earned it. . . . Neither does the captor become subject to the obligations to which the owner is liable. Antecedent collateral contracts, as bottomry, may exist, that will not affect him; he becomes possessed of the res ipsa but without being made liable to the personal contracts in which the proprietor is engaged (SIR WILLIAM

1249. Damages for delay.—In releasing goods.]—(1) The Procurator-General, in establishing that there was a reasonable suspicion that contraband goods had an enemy destination, so as to justify their seizure, is not limited to information found in the ship's papers or known to the captors at the time of seizure.

Substances used in tanning leather belonging to Swedish applts. were seized on the Falk & seven other vessels on their way from America to Sweden as absolute contraband with an ulterior enemy destination in Hamburg. The matter was eventually settled, & the Procurator-General discontinued his proceedings in 1919, four years after the seizure. Applts. claimed damages for the capture & detention of the goods, & for the inaction of the Procurator-General after applts. had disclosed their documents to him & had satisfied his requisitions:—Held: the original seizure was not unjustifiable & the continued detention of the goods was not wilfully or recklessly wrong or malicious, & applts.' claim failed.

(2) Nor is he liable for delay in releasing the goods if the delay has not been due to neglect or to some indirect object, & he has materials which are proper to be examined judicially.

(3) A decree for the release of goods does not warrant actual ability to remove them from the realm.

(4) The Procurator-General is not liable for a loss in the selling value of goods owing to a govt. restriction upon their export.

(5) It is not a general rule that whenever the Crown has had the benefit of the proceeds of goods seized claimant is entitled to interest if the goods are released to him.—THE FALK, ETC., [1921] 1 A. C. 787; 90 L. J. P. 282; 125 L. T. 257; 37 T. L. R. 512; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 180, P. C.

During the existence of the prize commission, there is no fixed & definite time by which the party can be said to be legally barred from calling on the captor to proceed to adjudication, although it may be proper to hold that there must exist a time which would work such an effect; but there is no prescribed limitation against the admission of a claim, nor any means by which the captor can protect himself but by applying to a ct. of competent jurisdiction. If he neglects to apply to any tribunal, he would be guilty of a great misdemeanour; if, through misapprehension he applies to an improper tribunal though he may defend himself against the charge of a misdemeanour, he cannot protect himself from the call of claimant to proceed to adjudication before a competent tribunal. . . . It is always in the power of claimant to compel the captor to proceed, if he neglects to do so himself (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HULDAH (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 235; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 303; 165 E. R. 448.

1260. Position of Crown—Real party proceeding.]—A Russian ship, coming into a British port under the protection of the Orders in Council & discharging her cargo, instead of departing forthwith was sold to a British subject & remained in a British port. She was seized, & proceedings taken against her, but before having an admission of claim, the Admty. Proctor, by direction of the Lords of the Admty., declared that he proceeded no further, but reserved the question of costs & damages:—Held: (1) the declaration does not necessarily entitle claimant to costs, it being always in the power of the Crown to stay the proceedings for condemnation; (2) the purchase of the ship by a British subject was a trading with the enemy not specially permitted by the Orders in Council, & therefore illegal; (3) for those reasons, & also for illegal opposition to those who seized the ship, under the authority of the ct., claimant must be condemned in the costs.

(4) With respect to seizures made by captors commissioned or non-commissioned, that the real party proceeding is always the Crown; in both cases & clearly in the case of commissioned captors, it is under the control of the Crown properly speaking, & the Crown may at any time it thinks fit, order the Queen's Proctor to take any measures it may according to its wisdom deem right, namely, to proceed no further, & to restore the property or whatever else it may deem proper (DR. 1262. Captor not proceeding to adjudication—Whether granted—Where no claim entered.]—Monition against captors to proceed to adjudication. Protest that there was no claim before the ct. & that this was a proceeding under the Dutch hostilities, & that the captors had no letter of marque against the Dutch, overruled.

It is the usual practice for a party to give in his claim, in the first instance; but it will not necessarily vitiate the process, if there has been no claim. If it should, in any manner, come to the knowledge of the ct. that a seizure had been made in the nature of prize, & that no proceedings had been instituted, it would be the duty of the ct. to direct proceedings to be commenced. In common condemnations, it is not necessary to wait for a claim (per cur.).—THE WILLIAM (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 214; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 383; 165 E. R. 580.

1265. Verification on oath—Necessity for—By master or person able to verify.]—An American vessel coming from America without any knowledge of the blockade of Amsterdam, & bringing a cargo for that port came to Falmouth, & . . . finding that the port of Amsterdam was under blockade petitioned for a licence, & obtained from this govt., as I understand the matter, a licence to go to Amsterdam. . . . The terms of the permission . . . [were] “to the ports of the Vlie, Emden, Rotterdam, or elsewhere.” . . . This vessel was taken entering the Texel. . . . If a licence is given to go through the Vlie, it is not substantially violated by going through another passage, unless it is shown that it contained some specific prohibition as to other passages. . . . To shut up the ports of a country, & exclude neutrals from all commerce with it, is a great inconvenience upon them, although it is one to which they are bound to submit; for . . . a belligerent has a right to impose a blockade on the ports of his enemy. . . . It is a harsh right, & though a licence is a privilege . . . licences in such a case are to be favourably regarded, & it imports the good faith & honour of the govt. which grants them, not to press the letter too rigorously. This licence is “To carry a cargo to the ports of the Vlie or elsewhere”; with several provisions, amongst which there is certainly no proviso that she shall come out again; but that is a benefit incidental to the licence, & inseparable from it; for it cannot be imagined that she was to go there, & be shut up & incarcerated, & become herself an object of the blockade. A ship that has entered previous to the blockade may retire in ballast, or taking a cargo that had been put on board before the blockade. . . . A neutral has no right to say, I am here accidentally, & therefore I have a right to take out a cargo notwithstanding the blockade. [Where a] man goes in with a permission, which takes off, as to him, the first & primary object of the blockade, the prohibition of taking in a cargo; he is entitled to be distinguished from the ordinary case of other neutrals previously there. . . . In the Ct. of Admty., papers by themselves prove nothing; they are a mere dead letter; if they are not supported by the oaths of persons in a situation to give them validity. . . . The master must verify his papers. . . . The verification should be less positive than where he is himself the agent; but . . . he should depose at least that he believes the cargo to be as asserted in the claim. . . . When a cargo is taken on board in an enemy's port, & that port blockaded, which is a circumstance of some weight, as affording a greater temptation to fraud, if the master is not required to say even that he believes the property to be as claimed, it would open the door to every sort of abuse.

But it is said, the master does go this length in swearing "that all the papers are true" & that this amounts to a verification of the property; so he does if you take that part of his deposition substantively, & apart from the rest; but looking to other parts, & finding, that when he is asked . . . what he knows or believes, for he is examined to his belief, he can depose nothing, & that he has no belief, it is impossible to say that this man's deposition confirms the papers, in the manner in which it is necessary that they should be supported. . . .

I am of the opinion that the master is entitled to his freight & expenses on two grounds; if he had taken no cargo, he would not have been liable to be stopped; & . . . having received this cargo so improperly documented on board, he would have been liable to have been stopped on that account although he has not been coming from a blockaded port (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JUNO (1799), 2 Ch. He must describe the place to which he belongs & he must negative all enemy's interest in a form specially framed for that purpose, & intended to apply, to all intents, to any person resident within the territories of the enemy, to whatever country he may happen to owe allegiance (DR. LUSHINGTON).

There is no letter of procuration exhibited . . . it is a case of further proof, & being so, it becomes necessary to look further into it; for unless the circumstances are such as to satisfy the ct., at least in some degree, that it is a fair case, the parties will not be entitled to the privilege of further proof.

The circumstances of a case may be such as to make it utterly incredible, although there are confident attestations in support of it; the circumstances may be highly unnatural & irreconcilable with any view of a fair transaction. The court must undoubtedly be upon its guard against running wild upon mere general presumptions; but it must judge of the common transactions of life upon the same ordinary principles on which the probity & fairness of such matters is examined in the general practice of mankind (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ARGO (1799), 1 Ch. 1325. Circumstances of suspicion in evidence of claimants.]—Under this defect of all circumstances of suspicion in the original evidence, the ct. is called upon to admit the affidavits of the captors, first, for the purpose of working condemnation, as, if that fails, to save the captors from the payment of any expenses which they may have incurred. If I should accede to this demand, the consequence would be, that I must do it upon a uniform principle of admitting affidavits universally & in all cases, though there should be nothing to excite suspicion in the original evidence, & though the language of all the witnesses is as precise as possible. I can come to no such conclusion (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HAABET (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 54; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 524; 165 E. R. 848.

1327. — Disclosed in letter taken from another ship.]—A paper is offered to the ct. as evidence in this case, which, it is contended, cannot be received. . . . The ct. itself might possess information that would completely falsify the claim. Could it be said, in such a case, that, because the depositions & the formal papers were consistent, there should be no means of extracting the real truth of the facts? Could it be expected that the ct. should proceed to judgment on the mere formal evidence, in opposition to its own private conviction, that the whole of what was there stated was false? It would be impossible to maintain that proposition to the utmost extent. . . . When a case is perfectly clear, & not liable to any just suspicion, the disposition of the ct. will certainly lean strongly against the introduction of extraneous matter, & against permitting the captors to enter upon further inquiries, but in the present instance the case is not free from objection on the original evidence. . . . If there is no doubt that the paper offered was a ship's paper, though on board another vessel . . . it is competent to me, when the evidence is of so stringent a nature as that proposed, to admit it (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ROMEO (1806), 6 Ch. 1337. ——— Not necessarily conclusive.]—The return to a commission of appraisement in prize is not invariably conclusive.

Claimants' goods were requisitioned & an appraisement was made without notice to claimants. The prize proceedings resulted in the release to claimants of the proceeds, i.e. the appraised value of the goods paid into ct. by the Crown. It appeared that the valuation had been made on an erroneous basis:—Held: a fresh inquiry must be held into the actual value of the goods.—THE CONSUL OLSSON, [1920] P. 43; 89 L. J. P. 145.

They [the expenses] may be ultimately . . . divided between both parties (i.e. the captor & claimant) (per CUR.).—THE FRAU MARIA (1799), 2 Ch. Rob. 292; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 235; 165 E. R. 320.

1339. Date at which appraisement made.—A German merchant ship was seized in the port of Sydney upon the outbreak of war. On Oct. 6, 1914, the Prize Ct. in New South Wales ordered that the ship be detained, & that she be temporarily delivered to the Lords of the Admty. without appraisement upon an undertaking to comply with the provisions of Ord. 29 of the Prize Ct. Rules, 1914. On June 3, 1915, the Crown filed a notice under that Ord. stating that it was desired to requisition the ship. On June 4, 1915, the Prize Ct., in pursuance of the notice, made an order under Ord. 29, r. 3, that the ship be forthwith released & delivered to the Crown without appraisement & providing that the order should be a confirmation of the delivery already made; & it was thereby further ordered, under r. 4, that, unless the parties should within twenty-eight days agree the value, it be referred to the Registrar "to fix the amount to be paid by the Crown in respect of the value of the ship & her consumable stores & provisions," the order providing that the value was to be taken as at Oct. 6, 1914:—Held: the value of the ship was properly ordered to be fixed under Ord. 29, r. 4, as at Oct. 6, 1914.—THE GERMANIA (No. 2), [1918] A. c. Whether coal in bunkers—Appraised as part of ship.—In appraising a ship brought in as a prize the coal in the bunkers is not to be appraised as part of the ship; it should be inventoried separately. #### PART XI. SECT. 9.

d. Delivery on bail—Before hearing—Danger of capture perishing.—No authority whatever is given to the ct. to release or deliver the capture, either on bail, by sale, or by any other

Sect. 9.—Bail. Sects. 10, 11 & 12: Sub-sects. 1 & 2. Sect. 13.]

Sureties not responsible in case of a subsequent intervention of hostilities. Bail dismissed.

This ct. is not in the habit of considering the effect of bonds precisely in the same limited way as they are viewed by the cts. of common law. In those cts. they are very properly considered as mere personal securities for the benefit of those parties to whom they are given. In this place they are subject to more enlarged considerations; they are here regarded as pledges or substitutes for the thing itself, in all points fairly in adjudication before the ct. (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE NIED ELWIN (1811), 1 Dods. 50; 165 E. R. 1229.

1341. Delivery on bail—Before hearing—Necessity for consent.—Petition to take cargo on bail before adjudication, not granted but upon consent.

I know of no instance in which the ct. has made such an order, unless where all the parties are consenting to it. The proper remedy for the inconvenience stated in this petition would be a commission for appraisement & sale (per CUR.).—THE COPENHAGEN (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 178; 165 E. R. 428.

1342. — Payment of costs & expenses incurred—Not condition of release.—Where goods seized as prize have been sold pending the hearing of the action for condemnation, the ct. will not order the proceeds in ct. to be placed on deposit or to be invested in the public funds.

Where goods seized as prize have not been sold, but, pending the hearing of the action for condemnation, are released to claimants against a bail bond, claimants are not required, as a condition of the release, to pay unconditionally the costs & expenses already incurred incident to the seizure & detention of the goods. These costs & expenses are only payable by claimants who obtain a decree in their favour in the condemnation action.

Claimant who has paid the costs & charges incident to the seizure & detention upon receiving delivery of the goods on bail should be given credit for the payment as against the bail, which represents the full value of the goods in the event of their subsequently being condemned, & the bail bond should be framed in terms which give effect to this right.—THE DROTNING SOPHIA, [1920] P. 200; 89 L. See, now, Prize Court Rules, 1914, Ord. 18, rr. 1, 5, 10.

1348. Reference to registrar & merchants—Nature of report.—This is a question on a report of the registrar & merchants, respecting an allowance & insurance on a cargo of corn seized & brought into this country. The cargo was decreed to be restored, & the registrar & merchants were directed to make a report on the value due to claimant; such reports are in their nature partly legal & partly mercantile. It is a report proceeding from persons qualified, in both these respects, to form a sound judgment on the subject before them; one of them being, from his connection with cts. of justice, supposed capable of forming his own opinion, & of assisting his associates on all questions of law, in the first instance subject to the inspection & correction of the ct., whilst the other part of this domestic forum consists of persons acquainted with trade, & exercising their judgment on matters relative to commerce (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HAABET (1800), 2 Ch. 1349. General rule—Costs not given.—The status of the Ionian states relative to Great Britain being of so doubtful a character, & depending on the nice construction of public documents, a commissioned captor, seizing an Ionian vessel, on the ground of illegal trade with Russia, though that trade is, in fact, legal, is not liable to condemnation in costs & damages, as having captured her without probable cause.

In the Prize Ct. ordinary costs, i.e. law costs, were seldom or never given to captors or claimants.

See Prize Court Rules, 1914, Ord. 18, r. 2.

1358. When ordered—Claimant ordinarily resident out of jurisdiction.]—The Procurator-General claimed the condemnation, as goods having an enemy destination or as enemy property, of pork consigned from the United States to applt. in Sweden. Applt., who was ordinarily resident at Gothenburg, filed a claim to the goods as his property intended exclusively for consumption in Sweden, the claim being supported by an affidavit & exhibited documents. The President, without any evidence on the part of the Crown, made an order that applt. should give £100 security for costs:—Held: it did not appear that the discretion conferred by Prize Court Rules, Ord. 18, r. 2, had not been exercised judicially, & the order was valid.—THE STANTON, [1917] A. 1360. — — — Costs of abandoned appeal.]—A sum of £500 was paid into ct. by claimants as security for the costs of their appeal to the Privy Council against a judgment of the Prize Ct. condemning their vessel for the carriage of contraband. The appeal was abandoned. Thereupon cross summonses were issued: (a) by claimants' solrs. for payment out of the sum in ct.; (b) by the Procurator-General for a charging order on the sum in ct., on the ground that the unsecured balance of the taxed costs of the Crown in the proceedings in the Prize Ct. would absorb the whole sum remaining after taxation of the Crown's costs in the abandoned appeal. Claimants' solrs. contended that, at any rate so far as their own costs were concerned, they had a prior claim upon the fund in ct.:—Held: as the solrs. had neither recovered nor preserved the fund the equitable jurisdiction of the ct. did not apply in their favour, & the Procurator-General's application for a charging order upon the whole fund must be allowed.—THE DIRIGO, [1920] P. 425; 90 L. 1361. Security proving insufficient—Right to charging order against goods restored—In another cause.]—The power of the President under Prize Court Rules, 1914, Ord. 45, to direct what practice shall be followed in prize proceedings in cases for which no provision is made in these rules does not extend to the creation of new rights against captured goods, & the ct.'s discretion as to costs under Ord. 18 cannot be used to increase the burden of neutral claimants. When captured goods are found to be free from condemnation, the only liability to which they are subject is captor's costs enforceable by international law & arising in the specific cause. Accordingly the Crown is not entitled, against the proceeds of goods ordered to be released to claimants, to a charging order in respect of unpaid costs in other causes in prize in which claimants' goods have been condemned & the security ordered to be given has proved to be insufficient.—THE ORANJE NASSAU, [1921] P. 190; 90 L. SECT. 15.—SETTING ASIDE DECREE.

1880. Whether court will set aside decree.—I will not go so far as to lay it down universally that it is not in the power of the ct. to reconsider its decrees on very particular occasions. . . . As a precedent it would be a practice highly dangerous; & the liberty of reviewing its decrees if it exists . . . is a liberty which the ct. would exercise with very great caution (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE VROUW HERMINA (1799), 1 Ch. The whole claim was made on behalf of the house in America, & three-fourths were restored as claimed; had the fourth share been bkpt.'s I should have thought the claim of the comrs. very strong & I should have seen no objection to restore to them instead of bkpt., for I accede to what has been said of the representative character of the assignees. But these assignees are not before the ct. as claimants; they might have appeared, & have given their claim; they have not done this, & restitution has already passed in solidum of three-fourth parts of the property claimed to the members of this house. The question then is, whether the ct. shall proceed again to make a severance between these parties. I cannot think that I have the power to do that (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JEFFERSON (1799), 1 Ch. 1384. — Injustice of allowing decree to stand.]—Where substantial injustice would otherwise result, the Prize Ct. has an inherent power to set aside its own decrees of condemnation so as to let in bonâ fide claims by parties who have not been heard, & who have not had an opportunity of appearing. This power is discretionary & should not be exercised except where there would be substantial injustice if the decree were allowed to stand, & where the application has been promptly made.—THE BOLIVAR, [1916] 2 A. C. 203; 85 L. J. P. 193; 114 L. T. 1005; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 369, P. C.

1385. — Order obtained by fraud.]—By fraudulent suppression of the true facts, claimants, a Copenhagen firm, obtained a decree that the proceeds of certain consignments of lard, which had been seized ex three neutral vessels, should be released to them on the ground that the consignments were shipped to them as bonâ fide purchasers to be sold to customers in Scandinavia & were not intended to be sent on to Germany. The Procurator-General, on behalf of the Crown, appealed. Before the appeal had been heard, evidence, which was not available at the time of the hearing, was obtained that at the material time claimants were engaged in exporting lard in considerable quantities to Germany, & that the sole proprietor of claimants' firm, who had sworn the affidavit which had been instrumental in obtaining the release, had been convicted in Denmark of fraud on the Danish insurance co., which had insured other consignments of lard on claimants' declaration that no foreign interest was involved, whereas in fact claimants had contracted to sell all the goods mentioned in the insurance policies to Germany. Thereupon the Procurator-General issued a fresh writ claiming a decree that the order for release be rescinded:—Held: the rule that a ct. has inherent right to set aside its own order if procured by fraud applies to the Prize Ct. as strongly as to any other ct.; had the whole of the facts been put before the ct. the order for release would not have been made; & accordingly, the order would be rescinded & the proceeds of sale condemned.—THE ALFRED NOBEL, THE BJÖRNSTERJNE BJÖRNSSON, THE FRIDLAND, [1918] P. 293; 87 L. ### SECT. 1.—RECAPTURE.

1387. Prerequisite to recapture—Effectual possession by enemy.]—This case comes before me upon an alleged act of recapture performed by the Thisbe, who had a number of merchant vessels under her convoy. One was captured by the enemy, & was afterwards retaken by the Thisbe; & for that service the Thisbe now stands before the ct., demanding the salvage which is allowed to King's ships on ordinary occasions under Prize Act. The first question that arises is, whether a convoying ship may be entitled to salvage from ships under her protection? . . . The relation which had subsisted between the convoying ship, & those under her care, would not take the case out of the general provisions of Prize Act. . . . Many cases might be put of the effect of immediate acts of recapture, to show that it is by no means necessary that the possession by the enemy should be long maintained, or at any particular distance from the convoying ship. The question will always be, whether it was an effectual possession, & such as would suspend the relation of the convoying ship. . . . it will be sufficient, if there has been that complete & absolute possession, which supersedes the authority of the convoying ship; & such a possession must have been maintained for some time in the present instance. Every act of possession was exercised; the master was taken out; the vessel was completely manned with as many of the captor's crew as were sufficient to overpower all resistance, & the vessel was taken in tow by the enemy. By those acts the former relation subsisting between the vessel & the convoying ship was suspended. . . . The capture is, I think, proved to have been sufficiently completed & unless I go to the length of holding that there must be a firm possession; & a bringing infra praesidia, I must pronounce this vessel to have been re-

1393. — — — —.]—The employment of a vessel in the public military service of the enemy, by those who have competent authority so to employ her, is a sufficient "setting forth for war" under Prize Act, though the vessel may not have been furnished with any formal commission of war.—THE CEYLON (1811), 1 Dods. 105; 2 Eng. authority in the person directing the vessel to be so employed, & nothing upon the face of the proceedings to invalidate it, the ct. will presume that he was duly authorised; the commander of a single ship may be vested with this authority as well as the commander of a squadron.—THE GEORGIANA (1814), 1 Dods. 397; 2 Eng. 1395. — Engagement with captor—Facilitating escape of prize.]—The Arethusa came up for the very purpose of taking this French captor, if he is to be so considered, & actually took him; & it is owing to this act of the Arethusa that this vessel was rescued from his grasp. . . . The sending of a prize master on board is a very natural overt act of possession, but by no means essential to constitute a capture. If the merchantman was obliged to lie to & obey the direction of the French lugger, & await her further orders, she was completely under the dominion of the enemy; there was no ability to resist, & no prospect of escape. . . . The only question will be, whether it is a case of salvage under the Act of Parliament, on another ground, viz. that the vessel never came into the actual & bodily possession of the recaptor, I rather incline to think that it is not. But if it is not a case of recapture under the Act, it is, however, still a case of salvage, under the general maritime law, & shall give the same reward, as if it had been under the Act of Parliament (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE EDWARD & MARY (1801), 3 Ch. 1396. — Ship rescued by crew on parole.]—These persons [the crew] were put on board by their own consent, on terms that were explained to them, & fully acquiesced in by themselves. They were bound, by their own engagement, as strongly as men could be, to abstain from all acts of violence, & to do nothing which had the least connection with hostility. In violation of the duties which they had thus stipulated for . . . they seize the boat of the cartel ship, attack their own vessel by means of this boat & carry her off by force against all opposition. . . . Here is a surprising & retaking, that has been effected through a violation of contract, by persons pretending to act upon rights which they had parted with, as well as by their own engagement, as by the nature of the situation in which they were placed. Such an act is essentially invalid & can have no legal consequence attached to it, either for the benefit of those persons themselves or for the benefit of others who may claim through them (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE MARY (1804), 5 Ch. 1415. Claim for joint recapture—Claimant in sight—On contrary course.]—THE LORD MIDDLETON, No. 377, ante.

1416. ———.]—Becalmed.]—It appears from the evidence of persons who are entirely disinterested, that the crew of the sloop could not have effected the recapture ; since that vessel had been separated, & was becalmed, & could not have got up. However active their intentions might have been, the wind did not favour their exertions. The actual captors were those who came off in a boat from the shore, by whose approach the instant terror was occasioned that intimidated the French, & compelled them to quit their prize—these persons must therefore be pronounced to be the sole salvors. . . .

Whether a salvage is due on the freight . . . will depend on . . . [a] question of fact. Whether the freight was in a course of being earned ? because I cannot go to the length of holding that it would be sufficient that the ship was enabled to earn freight by the act of recapture. If a vessel had been cut out of port, & had been afterwards recaptured, it could not be contended . . . that salvage would be due on freight accruing on the following voyage. . . . The ship had sailed from Savannah le Mar, in Jamaica, & was going to Bluefields, another port of that island, for the purpose of joining convoy : she might be under engagement to call for convoy, & yet be in itinere, as to her own voyage. Considering that the commencement had taken place & that the voyage was afterwards successfully terminated, & that the ct. is not in the habit of giving salvage pro rata itineris, I am of opinion that the case does come fairly within the general rule, & that the freight should be included (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE DOROTHY FOSTER (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 89 ; 165 E. R. 800.

1417. Ship condemned by former enemy—Intervening lawful acquisition by present enemy.]—A vessel taken by the enemy, & condemned, & then sold to a neutral person, would be completely converted, & that the character of the vessel so impressed would not be divested in favour of the former British owner by subsequent hostilities. If the vessel was not carried into a French port at the time of capture, that circumstance may be sufficient to shake the presumption that would otherwise arise in favour of a legal condemnation. . . . I must pronounce this ship to have belonged to the Spanish owner at the time of capture, as property acquired jure belli by the French captor, & duly transferred, before the commencement of hostilities between this country & Spain. The title of the British proprietor being divested, the ship must be condemned as prize to the captor (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE PURISSIMA CONCEPTION (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 45 ; 165 E. R. 844.

1426. Alliance with former enemy—Treaty providing for payment of salvage.]—This is the case of a Spanish ship which was recaptured, after being more than twenty-four hours in possession of the enemy. An extract from the Cádiz Commercial Gazette, dated Sept. 5, 1809, has been produced by claimants, referring to an article of a treaty between that country & the English Govt., by which it would appear that the vessels of the respective countries were, in future, to be restored on salvage, although the treaty itself has not yet been promulged. I can have no doubt, from the manner in which the fact is announced in the official Gazette of Spain, that the article was to take effect from that time. I shall, therefore, in this case, decree restitution to Spanish claimants, on payment of a salvage of one-eighth, & shall apply the same rule in the other cases, if they come within the same limit of time, unless the captors are able to procure evidence sufficient to repel the presumption arising upon what is here furnished by claimants (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SAN FRANCISCO (1810), 1 Edw. 279 ; 165 E. It certainly has not been the practice of this ct. to decree salvage under such circumstances generally. . . . I am therefore not disposed to hold generally, that neutral property recaptured from French cruisers shall be subject to salvage. The rule . . . is rather to be laid down the other way. . . . There does not appear . . . to be any ground on which it can be supposed that this property would have been condemned, merely because it came out of the hands of a British privateer, or because the original voyage had been from the colony of Spain to London. . . . The expenses of the recaptors must be fully paid; but I shall not pronounce salvage to be due (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE CARLOTTA (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 54; 165 E. R. 695.

1434. ———.]—Neutral property recaptured is not subject to salvage by the general rule of law on this subject, founded upon a supposition that justice would have been done if the vessel had been carried into the port of the enemy; & if any injury had been sustained by the act of capture, it would have been redressed by the tribunal of the country to whose cognisance the case would regularly have been submitted. It is true . . . that during the last war the universal system of plunder & violence, which was practised on the part of France, drew this ct. out of its usual course, & induced it to decree salvage, with the perfect acquiescence of the subjects of neutral states, who were fully sensible of the service that was rendered to them, by taking them out of French hands. But this exception did not alter the established doctrine of the ct. (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE HUNTRESS (1805), 6 Ch. Rob. 105; 165 E. R. 866.

1435. ———.]—The general practice of this ct. is not to decree salvage on neutral ships recaptured, upon the presumption that no peril had been incurred, but that on being carried into the cts. of the original captor, they would have been restored. This is a presumption which is to be entertained in favour of every state, which has not sullied its character by a gross violation of the law of nations. But the contrary presumption takes place if states hold out decrees of condemnation, however unjust & decrees on which the tribunals of the country are enjoined to act, & of which there is every reason to suppose, that they will be carried into execution. The reasoning on which the general rule had been founded is then done away with; the peril is obvious, & the case becomes simply that of meritorious rescue from the dangers of condemnation. . . . I am of opinion that this case stands, without anything that can enable me to distinguish it from the other cases already decided, & that I am bound to pronounce salvage to be due (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SANSOM (1807), 6 Ch. Rob. 411; 165 E. R. 981.

1436. ———.]—By the law of nations, the general rule is that no salvage is due for the recapture of a neutral vessel, upon the principle that the liberation of a bond fide neutral from the enemy confers no benefit upon the neutral, inasmuch as the enemy would be compelled by the tribunals of his own country to make restitution of the property thus unjustly seized. But where the vessel recaptured was practically liable, whether rightfully or wrongfully, to be confiscated by the enemy, salvage will be awarded to the recaptors.

Thus, where a German cruiser had captured a Greek vessel laden with a cargo of coal belonging to British merchants & destined for the North Western State Railway of India on the ground that she was carrying contraband, & the vessel was recaptured by a British cruiser, the ct., being of opinion that the recapture saved the vessel from condemnation in any German prize proceedings or from the almost certain risk of destruction if dealt with by the captors on the high seas, awarded to the recaptors as prize salvage one-sixth of the vessel's value £7,333.—THE PONTOPOROS, [1916] 1 P. 100; 85 L. #### 1444. Neutral ship transporting cargo for allies.]

—A Swedish vessel, laden with a cargo of munitions for the French Govt., was stopped in the English Channel by a German submarine & the crew were ordered to take to the boats. The submarine was preparing to sink the vessel, but submerged, presumably on sighting two of His Majesty's armed trawlers, & the crew of the vessel were left in their boats. They refused to return, & the two armed trawlers stood by the vessel & eventually towed her to Falmouth. For these services the officers & crews of the trawlers claimed salvage remuneration from the owners of the Swedish vessel & her cargo, but the claim against the cargo was withdrawn. It was argued for deft. shipowners that plffs. were bound to save a cargo of munitions for an allied Govt. as part of their public duty; that the saving of the ship was merely incidental to the saving of the cargo; that it was salvage from a war risk, namely, the risk of attack by enemy submarines, & not salvage from a marine risk; & that no salvage remuneration was recoverable:—Held: (1) assuming plffs. were under a duty to save the cargo, they were under no duty to the Swedish shipowners to save their vessel; (2) the saving was not only from submarine attack but from maritime perils also; & (3) there being a salvage service, the whole risk to the salvaged vessel, war as well as marine risk, should be taken into account in estimating the value of the services.—THE CARRIE, [1917] P. 224; 86 L. 1446. —.]—The standing doctrine of the ct. has been, that neutral property, taken out of the possession of the enemy, is not liable to salvage. It is the doctrine to which the ct. has invariably adhered, till it was forced out of its course, by the notorious irregularities of the French cruisers, & of the French govt., which proceeded, without any pretence of sanction from the law of nations, to condemn neutral property. On these grounds, it was deemed not unreasonable, by neutrals themselves, that salvage should be paid, for a deliverance from French capture (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE ELEONORA CATHARINA (1802), 4 Ch. 1449. —.]—This is a case which involves the question whether these American ships & cargoes which were not proceeding to French ports are liable to pay salvage on recapture by British vessels out of the hands of the enemy. The principle to which this ct. adheres is that no salvage is due where a service is not actually performed, or where loss was not highly probable. . . . In the present case the ground assigned by the captor for the claim of salvage is, that there are no certificates of origin on board this vessel, & much discussion has taken place upon the question, whether or not this requisition was confined to ships navigating to the ports of France. . . . On the whole of the circumstances of this case, without looking minutely into the varying policy of France, I think there is very rational ground to apprehend that the French Prize Cts. would have considered these ships as legal captures, & therefore I shall pronounce for the usual salvage.

A similar question arose upon the capture of American vessels by Danish cruisers, when the ct. made the same decree (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).

In May, 1915, a British submarine torpedoed & sank a Turkish transport having on board 6,000 Turkish troops, who had with them rifles & ammunition, also six field guns so disposed on the ship's deck that, at suitable ranges, they could have been used with effect against the submarine. The ship was a Turkish fleet auxiliary manned by naval ratings & commanded by Turkish naval officers; she carried as part of her regular equipment a few light quick-firing guns. The officers & crew of the submarine applied to the Prize Ct. for prize bounty:—Held: the meaning of the words “armed ship” in Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42 was not limited to a ship commissioned & armed for the purpose of offensive action in a naval engagement, & appcts. were entitled to prize bounty under the Order in Council.—H.M.

(2) No accurate figures being available to establish the numbers of the persons on board the enemy vessels the ct., believing claimants' estimate to have been made with the intention of accuracy, accepted it.—Re NAVAL OPERATIONS IN MESOPOTAMIA 1914–15, [1923] P. 149; 92 L. 1469. — — — Sailing vessel conveying munitions—Crew armed with rifles.]—Acting on the instructions of the Naval Commander-in-Chief the claimants, the officers & crew of a British submarine, sank by gunfire a number of small Turkish sailing vessels engaged in carrying munitions of war to the Turkish military bases & arsenals in the Sea of Marmora.

The vessels did not carry any armament structurally attached to them, but their crews were armed with rifles &, on each occasion when attacked, the crews took to their boats, got ashore, & opened fire on the submarine with their rifles.

By an Order in Council of Mar. 2, 1915, which put into operation Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42, prize bounty at the rate of £5 for each person on board the enemy's ship is payable to such of the officers & crew of any of His Majesty's ships of war as are present at the taking or destroying of any armed ship of the enemy:—Held: (1) the inference to be drawn from the facts that the commander of the submarine had instructions to sink sailing craft of the sort in question & that in each case the crews, instead of scattering & making their escape, opened fire on the submarine, was that these sailing vessels had been taken under the control of the Turkish Administration, & were not to be regarded merely as merchant vessels in private ownership engaged in the carriage of contraband. They were therefore ships of the enemy within Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42; (2) the vessels were armed ships when they were attacked, & it would give too restricted an operation to the rights provided by the statute to hold that they had ceased to be armed ships because their crews with their rifles had left before the vessels were actually destroyed. Claimants, therefore, were entitled to an award of prize bounty.—H.M. SUBMARINE E.12 & TURKISH VESSELS, [1924] P. 29; 93 L. J. P. 7; 40 T. L. R. 18.

The British cavalry were also advancing, but had been held up by a strong Turkish rearguard, & were some miles away & out of reach of the flotilla when the captures were made. objected that the captures were the result of a joint naval & military operation, & therefore outside the provisions of the statute:—Held: the question was not whether on the date in question the flotilla & the troops were engaged in a joint scheme of operations, but whether they were jointly engaged in the capture of the Turkish vessels; the troops in fact took no part in the capture; & the officers & crews of the flotilla were entitled to bounty.—Re MESOPOTAMIA OPERATIONS, 1917, THE SULMAN PAK, [1922] P. 73; 91 L. 1492. —.]—By Order in Council of Mar. 2, 1915, His Majesty, in accordance with Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42, declared his intention to grant as prize bounty for distribution among such of the officers & crews of any of his ships of war as were actually present at the taking or destroying of any armed ship of any of His Majesty's enemies a sum calculated at the rate of £5 for each person on board the enemy's ship at the beginning of the engagement.

On Dec. 7, 1914, a British squadron of warships, which were searching for a squadron of German warships, arrived at Port Stanley in the Falkland Islands. A council of war was held on board the flagship, & it was decided that H.M.S. Canopus, which had been lying at Port Stanley for some weeks, should remain there for the defence of the port. The Canopus was firmly embedded in the mud, where she had been grounded in a position to obtain an all-round fire to seaward, & her double bottoms had been flooded to keep her steady. On the approach of two enemy cruisers the next morning, being in a position to fire over the land, she fired two salvos with her 12-inch guns at a range of 11,000 yards, & there was evidence that a ricochet from the second salvo hit the bass of the after funnel of one of the cruisers & killed five men. The enemy vessels then steamed away to rejoin their squadron, & the British squadron, with the exception of the Canopus, proceeded out of harbour. A general chase ensued, & late in afternoon, after a running fight, the enemy squadron was brought to action & four of the enemy ships were sunk, the main action taking place over 100 miles away from Port Stanley.

On a motion on behalf of the officers & crew of H.M.S. Canopus to share in the sum of £12,160 previously awarded as prize bounty to the British squadron in respect of the destruction of the enemy ships:—Held: the Canopus did not form a part of the squadron or take part in the engagement, & the officers & crew were not entitled to share in the bounty as being actually present at the destruction of any of the enemy ships within Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42.—*Re FALKLAND ISLANDS BATTLE, Ex p. 1495. —.]—By an Order in Council of Mar. 2, 1915, pursuant to Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 42, His Majesty declared his intention to grant as prize bounty for distribution among such of the officers & crews of any of his ships of war as were actually present at the taking or destroying of any armed ship of any of His Majesty's enemies "a sum calculated at the rate of £5 for each person on board the enemy's ship at the beginning of the engagement."

On May 31—June 1, 1916, the British Grand Fleet, consisting of 151 ships, fought the German fleet off the coast of Jutland & eleven enemy ships were destroyed. It being impossible under the circumstances to contend that any one ship or squadron was responsible for the destruction of any particular enemy ship, the Grand Fleet agreed that the battle should be treated as a joint & common enterprise, & there being in all 4,537 persons on board the destroyed enemy ships, the ct. decreed that the bounty due to the officers & crews of the 151 ships concerned was the sum of £22,685.—*Re BATTLE OF JUTLAND, [1920] P. 408; 90 L. 1505. Flag officer in effective command.]—By Art. 4 of the King's Proclamation of 1797, respecting the distribution of prize, as to flag officers, it is directed, that a chief flag officer returning home from a foreign station shall have no share of the prizes taken by the ships left behind to act under another command : this applies as well to another command devolving by seniority, as to another chief flag officer appointed by express commission to succeed the officer returning home : & such returning home, etc., means the commencement in fact of a commander-in-chief's departure from the local station of his command for the purpose of returning home, leaving his fleet behind, i.e. leaving it for all effective purposes under the control of another commander competent, under the terms of the proclamation, to command in his stead. Therefore where a flag officer, commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean, returned to England by leave of the Admty. for the recovery of his health, leaving the fleet under the command of the next flag officer in seniority, but having, before his departure, dispatched one of the fleet on a cruise, who made captures within the limits of the station, after the departure homewards of such commander-in-chief out of those limits, but before any new orders given by the next flag officer on whom the command of the station had devolved :—Held : the right to the one-eighth, or commanding flag officer's share of prize, belonged to the present acting flag officer in command on the station, & not to the chief flag officer returning home, although the latter still retained the title, pay, & table money, of commander-in-chief, after his return home, & did not resign his commission as such till after the prize taken, & had official correspondence with the Admty. in that character till his resignation, & made appointments in the fleet as such ; the governing principle of His Majesty's Proclamation being, that the reward of prize should be attached to the present effective commander on the station, & not to the nominal one who returns home, leaving ships behind to act under another command.—NELSON (LORD) v. TUCKER (1803), 4 East, 238; 102 E. 1518. Capture within limits of command—By reinforcing fleet.—This question turns on the interpretation of that passage of the proclamation which directs that “when an inferior flag officer is sent out to reinforce a superior flag officer, the superior flag officer shall have no right to any share of prizes taken by the inferior flag officer before the inferior flag officer shall arrive within the limits of the command of the superior flag officer, & actually receive some order from him. . . .” Lord Keith was Commander-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station. . . . Sir James Saumarez was sent out for the general purpose of reinforcing him. . . .

The Mediterranean station was of very wide extent, comprehending services very miscellaneous in their nature, & of great importance. . . .

The terms of the orders to Sir J. Saumarez were “to invigorate the blockade of Cadiz,” which Lord Keith’s force was then keeping up. Sir J. Saumarez came within the limits of the station. He heard of an enemy’s squadron in Algeiras Bay, & attacked them, but unsuccessfully, & went to Gibraltar to refit, which was the principal port of the station, & might be called almost the headquarters of the Commander-in-Chief. When he was there, he received orders from Lord Keith. . . . The prize [was] a vessel which had escaped from the blockading force. . . .

Here is an exercise of authority connected with the very service to be performed. I am of opinion that it does fall within the words of the proclamation, & that Lord Keith is entitled to his flag share (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE SAN ANTONIO (1804), 5 Ch. Rob. 209; 165 E. R. 751.

1521. ———.]—The commander of the Cork naval station, on May 3, ordered the Loire frigate, under his command, to cruise for a month within certain limits mentioned; whether within the Cork station or not did not appear, but in case of obtaining intelligence of the enemy being at sea, to return immediately & report the same to him, unless the captain should deem it more serviceable first to apprise the Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Fleet off Brest of it, & then to return to Cork without loss of time. The Loire having sailed & obtained such intelligence on her cruise, went off Brest & communicated it to the Commander of the Channel Fleet on May 25, who, on the 28th, ordered the Loire to go off Ferrol with dispatches, etc., & afterwards, & whilst in the execution of her former orders from the commander of the Cork station, to look out for the Jamaica homeward bound convoy within certain limits, which were partly within & partly beyond her original cruising orders, & if met with, to protect them up St. George’s & the Bristol Channel. The Loire having delivered the dispatches, etc., to the naval commander off Ferrol, on her return took three prizes, beyond, as was admitted, the limits of the Channel station, & asserted to be within the Cork station; but whether or not within the Cork station, was deemed to be immaterial in this case:—Held: the Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Fleet did not, in the true meaning of his orders to the Loire, intend to retain her under his command after the execution of his order off Ferrol, but only that she should attend to his further instructions whilst executing her original orders, & as a modification of or addition to such orders, rather than as a supercession or abrogation of them. But if he had so intended, he had no right so to retain her out of the limits of his command, by partial modifications of her original orders, for the purpose of entitling himself to prize taken by her out of such limits, in derogation of the rights of another flag officer. Qu.: how the case would be where a cruiser in chase pursues an enemy out of the limits of one station into another.—*GARDNER (LADY) v. 1523. Flag officer of allied fleet—Serving under British command.]—(1) If the fleet of an ally & a British fleet serve together under a British commander-in-chief, who detaches the squadron of the ally, the admiral of the auxiliary power is not entitled as a flag officer to share prizes made by British ships detached in another direction, to which he lent no actual co-operation in effecting the capture. Because he is not in the pay of Britain, & the prize Acts & proclamations give the prizes only to those who are in the king's pay; & because he is not, within the meaning of the proclamation, a flag officer assisting in the capture.

If an ally actually co-operates in effecting a capture, he cannot recover any proportion of the prizes in the common law cts. of this country, he must sue in the prize cts. If the prize ct. condemns a captured vessel as prize to his Majesty, the sentence, while unappealed from, is conclusive on the common law cts., & on all the world, that no ally or other person is entitled to a share in it. The common law cts. cannot entertain jurisdiction of the question, whether prize or no prize, or by whom taken.—DUCKWORTH v. TUCKER (1809), 2 Taunt. 7; 127 E. R. 976.

If an Admiral is appointed by the Admty., & actually has given an order to a fleet, he is entitled to share in captures, though he was not within the station at the time they were made.

I know of no such indulgence having been shown to an Admiral who has issued a command without such authority (LORD STOWELL).—Re CAPTURES ON THE JAMAICA STATION (1823), 1 Hag. Adm. 129; 100 E. R. 47.

See Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), Sched. Part II.

1537. Necessity for sanction of tribunal.]—In Apr. 1916, a neutral vessel was seized as prize on the ground that she was engaged in unneutral service. The law officers of the Crown advised that on the facts the vessel could not be condemned, & eventually a claim for damages amounting to over 170,000, dollars put forward by the charterer, was compromised by a payment of 55,000 dollars & the vessel was released. The decision that the claim must be settled was arrived at before the passing of the Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), & at a time therefore when no one had any interest in prize money except the Crown, but the actual payment & release of the vessel did not take place until Dec. 1919, more than a year after the passing of Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), & the promulgation thereunder of the proclamation authorising the payment of prize money to the fleet:—Held: (1) after the passing of Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), the officers of the Crown would have had no authority to create charges on the fund, & it would be prudent in future cases to obtain the sanction of the tribunal to any compromise intended to result in a charge on the fund. As, however, the decision was before Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), & the tribunal was of opinion that the advisers of the Crown acted rightly in settling the claim, the Exchequer was entitled, under para. 5 of the sched. to Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), to be indemnified out of the fund. But as the tribunal was also of opinion that the amount for which the claim was settled was larger than it would have been if the vessel had been released sooner, the fund ought not to be charged with the whole amount. Accordingly, it would be decreed that the fund should bear one-third & that two-thirds would remain a charge on the Exchequer.

Insurances against fire & damage by aircraft were effected by the marshal on the goods of certain neutral claimants under a floating policy covering all ships & cargoes seized in port. The goods, which if condemned would have been droits of the Crown, were ordered to be released & claimants were held to be not liable for the insurance premiums:—Held: (2) the premiums, including the proportionate amounts for the periods between the orders for release & the dates when claimants took away their goods, were, under para. 1 of the sched. to Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), a charge upon the fund.—THE OREGON, THE CAIRNSMORE, & THE GUNDA, [1921] P. 224; 90 L. 1538. Expenses arising from disposal of prize—Where formerly payable by allottees of prize proceeds.]—Under para. 4 of Part II. of the sched. to the Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), "Charges on Naval Prize Fund" "include any claims in respect of any ship or goods subject to prize jurisdiction, which are droits of the Crown or which if condemned would have been droits of the Crown or of the proceeds of sale of, or money representing, any such ship or goods which the Treasury on the recommendation of the Prize Claims Committee may have paid or may hereafter pay, being claims of a nature that had they been established in prize proceedings would have been ordered by a prize ct. to be paid by the persons entitled to the ship or goods, or out of the money representing the same."

The Treasury, on the recommendation of the Prize Claims Committee, paid various claims for wages, disbursements, towage, mtge. & other matters in respect of ships condemned as prize & declared to be droits of the Crown, but none of the claims were of a character which could be supported in a prize ct.:—Held: as the second condition of para. 4 of the sched. to Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), was not fulfilled the sums paid by the Treasury were not repayable out of the Naval Prize Fund.—THE ADOLPH, [1920] P. 333; 90 L. J. P. 100; 123 L. T. 688; 36 T. L. R. 634; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 192.

1539. Claim of neutral owners—Loss due to seizure of ship—Where no unneutral act found.]—THE OREGON, THE CAIRNSMORE, & THE GUNDA, No. 1537, ante.

1540. ———.]—The C., a neutral vessel, was stopped by a British cruiser & sent into port under a prize crew for examination. By an error of the navigating officer she was lost before reaching the examination port. It subsequently appeared that the cargo on board the C. was not contraband, that the C. had not committed any unneutral act, & that if she had reached port she would have been released after examination. Claims by the neutral owners for the loss of the C. & her cargo were eventually admitted by the Govt., & certain sums were paid to them in compensation. The Treasury claimed to have these sums charged on the Naval Prize Fund under Part II. (5) of the sched. to Naval Prize Act, 1918 (c. 30), which provides that there shall be charged on & payable out of the Naval Prize Fund "costs, charges, expenses & claims which the tribunal consider may reasonably be treated, having regard to the principles & practice heretofore observed by prize cts., as being costs, charges, and claims which, had there been a grant of prize to captors, captors would have been liable to pay." At the hearing it appeared that the loss of the C. was due to her speed having been inaccurately given to the prize officer by her master, & not to the negligence of the prize officer:—Held: an unconditional admission of liability by the Govt. did not constitute binding & un rebuttable evidence that there was a liability, nor relieve the Naval Prize Tribunal of determining for themselves whether a claim was to be treated as one which the captors would have been liable to pay having regard to the principles & practice heretofore observed by prize cts. But in view of the difficulty of defending the case in the Prize Ct., & of the fact that the admission of the Govt. had perhaps saved the fund from an adverse decision, such sum as might reasonably have been paid to effect a settlement ought to be charged on the prize fund. Half the sums paid ordered to be charged on the prize fund.—THE CANADIA (1922), 127 L. T. 499; 38 T. L. R. 553; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 606.

1541. ————.]—The Oscar II., a neutral vessel laden with a cargo of coffee, was sunk through a collision with a British cruiser while the cruiser was engaged in effecting the capture of the vessel & her cargo as prize. The collision was solely due to the negligence of the officer in command of the cruiser. The owners of a parcel of the lost coffee brought an action against the Procurator-General & recovered damages. The Bernisse & The Elve were two neutral vessels bound from a French colonial port to Rotterdam which were stopped by a British cruiser just outside the area declared by Germany to be a prohibited area in which any neutral vessel would be liable to be sunk by German submarines. The vessels were sent in for examination to Kirkwall on the ground that they had not got certain clearance papers which were given to vessels which had called at a British port. When in the submarine area one of the vessels was sunk by a German submarine & the other was damaged. Their owners recovered damages from the Procurator-General on the ground that, having come from a French port with proper documents, it was a mistake to send the vessels to Kirkwall:—Held: in each case the damages constituted a charge upon the Naval Prize Fund & not upon the Exchequer.—THE OSCAR II, THE BERNISSE, THE ELVE, [1921] P. 173; 90 L. Ransoms have been forbidden, as subject to great abuse, being, in the common acceptance, contracts entered at sea, by individual captors, & very liable to be abused, to the great inconvenience of neutral trade. But even ransoms, under circumstances of necessity, are still allowed. Capitulations, in their nature, can scarcely become liable to the same objection; they being contracts between the commander & the conquered state; on the contrary they have always been favourably supported, & it is of great importance to the general interests of the captured that they should be sustained (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—SHIPS TAKEN AT GENOA (1803), 4 Ch. war all commercial intercourse with the enemy is illegal at common law, it follows that whatever contract tends to protect the enemy's property from the calamities of war, though effected antecedent to the war, is nevertheless illegal. It has been supposed that the doctrine which has prevailed respecting ransom bills tends to favour these insurances; but, no action was ever maintained upon a ransom bill in a ct. of common law until the case of Ricord v. Bettenham (1765), 3 Burr. 1743; & I have the authority of Sir William Scott for saying that in the Admty. Ct. the suit was always instituted by the hostage. The case, however, certainly tended to show that such an action might be maintained in the cts. of common law at the suit of an alien enemy. In consequence of this a similar action was brought in Cornu v. Blackburn (1781) Doug. 641, & after argument the ct. of King's Bench held that it might be maintained. But in Anthon v. Fisher (1782), Doug. 649, the contrary was expressly determined upon a writ of error in the Exchequer Chambers (LORD ALVANLEY, C. J.).—FURTADO v. ROGERS (1802), 3 Bos. & P. 191; 127 E. R. 105.

1557. What may be requisitioned—Neutral property—Selzure as contraband.]—By Prize Court Rules, 1914, Ord. 1, r. 2, “unless the contrary intention appears, the provisions of these Rules relative to ships shall extend & apply, mutatis mutandis, to goods.” By Ord. 29, r. 1, where the Lords of the Admty. desire to requisition a ship & there is no reason to believe that the ship is entitled to be released, the judge shall order the ship to be appraised & to be delivered to them, “Provided that no order shall be made by the judge under this rule in respect of a ship which he considers there is good reason to believe to be neutral property.” By r. 3, where a ship is required forthwith for the service of the Crown, a judge can order it to be forthwith released to the Lords of the Admty. without appraisal. Certain copper was shipped at New York by an American co. on board a Norwegian vessel & was consigned to Sweden, & was bought afloat by Swedish subjects under a contract guaranteeing that it was for consumption in Norway &/or Sweden. While the vessel was at sea, copper was declared absolutely contraband, & the copper in question was afterwards seized at sea & brought to Liverpool, & the Crown issued a writ in prize claiming that the goods were liable to confiscation. Subsequently an order was made ex p. by the registrar instructing the marshal to release the copper to the Lords of the Admty. who wished to requisition it. On an application to discharge the order:—Held: though there was sufficient doubt as to whether the goods were entitled to be released to prevent the order from being bad on the ground that there was reason to believe that they were so entitled, yet as they were neutral property it was impossible for the Crown to requisition them, & therefore the order must be discharged.—THE ANTARES (1915), 31 T. In Oct. 1915, she was bought bond fide & paid for by a neutral firm. In Jan. 1916, the vessel was captured by a British cruiser, & subsequently she was requisitioned by the British Govt. The vessel's condemnation was sought on the ground that the sale was invalid; the neutral purchasers claimed damages & costs, also the profits derived from the use of the vessel:—Held: the neutral owners were not entitled to damages or costs, since on the facts, including those unknown at the time of capture, there was substantial ground for questioning the neutral or private character of the ship, & claimants' case had been supported by flagrantly false affidavits which rendered a judicial inquiry a reasonable requirement; & in any case the claim to the profits earned by the use of the ship under requisition could not be sustained.—THE EDNA, [1921] 1 A. 1559. ———. Prerogative right of Crown.]—A British ship lying in a neutral port & laden with a cargo of timber belonging to neutrals of another country was requisitioned during the war by the British Govt., & brought home with her cargo to this country without the consent & against the protest of the cargo owners. The timber was then requisitioned by the Comptroller of Timber Supplies on behalf of the Board of Trade avowedly under Defence of the Realm Regulations, regs. 2 B. & 2 JJ. The owners of the cargo made a claim in the War Compensation Ct. for compensation & contended that it should be assessed under Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), s. 2 (2) (iii) (a), on the ground that in the circumstances they would but for Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), have had a legal right to compensation:—Held: Defence of the Realm Regulations did not apply to a seizure of goods of a neutral brought into this country against his will; the requisition of the timber was justifiable as an exercise of the royal prerogative right of angary & was therefore made "in exercise of" a prerogative right of His Majesty "within Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), s. 2 (1) (b), inasmuch as that right involved the obligation to pay full compensation to the owner of the property seized, claimants "would have had apart from Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), a valid claim for compensation by petition of right, & the Crown admitting that such a claim constituted "a legal right to compensation," compensation was therefore to be assessed according to the principle laid down in Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), s. 2 (2) (iii) (a).—*COMMERCIAL & ESTATES CO. 1560. Appeal from requisitioning order—When leave granted—By Judicial Committee.—The Judicial Committee will not grant special leave to appeal from a requisitioning order made by the judge of the Prize Ct. under the Prize Court Rules, Ord. 29, it not being disputed that the goods were urgently required for the prosecution of the war, unless, in their Lordship's opinion, the judge, in determining that there was cause for investigation so that an immediate release to claimant would be improper, applied the wrong principles or came to an obviously erroneous decision. Special leave to appeal refused without deciding whether there was an appeal as of right.—THE CANTON, [1917] A. C. 102; 86 L. J. P. 30; 115 L. T. 845; 33 T. L. R. 65; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 565, P. C.

1563. — Compensation for loss of ship—Appraised value—Where owner entitled to restoration.—Art. 2 of Hague Convention No. 6 provides that a belligerent may not confiscate an enemy merchant ship detained in the belligerent's port at the commencement of hostilities, but may "merely detain it, on condition of restoring it after the war, without payment of compensation, or he may requisition it on condition of payment of compensation."

The applicability of the above Art. between two belligerents does not depend upon whether they have mutually agreed to allow days of grace as contemplated in Art. 1; Art. 2 is obligatory, while Art. 1 is optional. Whatever may be the true meaning of the condition in Art. 6 that the Convention is to apply only "if all the belligerents are parties," Great Britain during the recent war frequently recognised that the Convention was binding, & thereby waived the right to rely upon non-fulfilment of the condition.

The conduct of Germany during the war in committing many acts in flagrant defiance of the Hague Conventions does not prevent Art. 2 of the sixth Convention from being binding upon Great Britain. Apart from considerations of municipal law, it is not the function of a prize ct., as such, to be a censor of the general conduct of a belligerent, as distinct from his dealings in the particular matters before the ct., or to sanction disregard of solemn obligations by one belligerent because it reprehends the whole behaviour of the other.

Where a detained ship has been requisitioned under Prize Court Rules, 1914, Ord. 29, & sunk, the German owner, if entitled to restoration under Art. 2, is entitled to the appraised value as the compensation provided for by Art. 2, & that right exists although the ship was sunk by German hostile action.

Part VIII., annex 3, Art. 1, of the Treaty of Versailles operates to transfer to the Allied & Associated Powers the property in all German ships of 1,600 tons & upwards. The former owners of ships of that tonnage therefore have no locus standi before the Prize Ct. under Art. 2 of the sixth Convention, nor right to discuss how those powers may deal inter se with the ships. But annex 3 effects no transfer of ships of lesser tonnage, at least until selected for surrender.

Art. 297 of the Treaty does not annul or modify the obligations under the Convention. The claim of Great Britain thereunder to retain ships to the release of which the German owners are entitled under Art. 2 of the Convention is not one for determination by the Prize Ct., but orders of the Prize Ct. for release should contain a provision to prevent rights under the Treaty from being defeated.

Three ships, each of under 1,600 tons gross, owned by a Danzig corpn. & detained in a British port at the commencement of hostilities, were requisitioned under Ord. 29 for the service of the Crown; while so requisitioned one of the ships was lost by grounding, & one by German hostile action. Applying the various considerations above stated, an order was advised that the appraised value of the two lost ships, & the ship remaining in specie, be released to the Custodian of Enemy Property to be delivered to the Danzig corpn., if after six months no proceedings had been begun for delivery to the Crown, otherwise to abide the final determinations of those proceedings.—THE BLONDE, [1922] 1 A.
